PREFACE.

THIS volume is designed as in some sort a revision and enlargement of the Octavo Abridgment of Webster's "American Dictionary" known as the "University edition," which was prepared by the late Professor Goodrich of Yale College, and was first issued in 1856. But as the "American Dictionary" was itself thoroughly revised in all its departments, and greatly augmented and improved, as recently as 1864, it was found that the original Abridgment could only in part be taken as the basis of reconstruction. The present work must therefore be considered as in the main an abstract from the last edition of the larger Dictionary, while the general plan is the same as that of its predecessor. Like that, it is intended to meet the wants of that large class of persons who wish to obtain in a single volume of moderate size and cost as complete a presentation as possible of the meaning, pronunciation, and orthography of the words which make up the main body of our modern English tongue. Like that, too, it has a specific end and object, having been "framed expressly for the benefit of those who are cultivating English composition on a broad scale, and are desirous to gain an exact knowledge of our language, and a ready command of its varied forms of expression." How far the work will answer these purposes may appear from a more detailed statement of its chief features, and of the principles on which it has been constructed.

I. Introduction. — Instead of the "Principles of Pronunciation" and the "Remarks on Orthography" contained in the former edition, the fuller and more elaborate articles on these subjects in the Quarto Dictionary have been substituted. The orthoëpic notation is also the remodeled and simplified notation of the Quarto, which contains a few characters additional to those of the one previously employed. A "List of Words Spelled in Two or More Ways" is subjoined to the "Principles of Orthography," and will be found to be an addition of much practical usefulness. An explanatory list of the more common Prefixes and Suffixes, with illustrative examples, forms a new feature of the work, and one which adds not a little to its value. As these formative syllables enter into the composition of multitudes of words, a knowledge of their signification is very important, and the preliminary information which is furnished renders it unnecessary to explain them in each particular instance in the body of the Dictionary.

II. Dictionary Proper. — 1. The Vocabulary contains a wide and careful selection of those words in regard to which miscellaneous readers may be presumed to need information. It comprises, or is meant to comprise, all English words in actual use at the present day, including many terms in the various departments of Science and Art, especially such as pertain to those departments with which all well-educated persons are supposed to have some acquaintance. Obsolete words have for the most part been omitted, as their insertion would increase the bulk and enhance the price of the volume to too great a degree. Rare words and self-explaining compounds have been omitted for similar reasons. Important phrases, however, are given, accompanied with explanations, which, though necessarily concise, will be found to be clear and exact.

2. Definitions. Most Dictionaries designed for popular use are distinguished by an imprecision and unsatisfactoriness of definition resulting from the fact that the meanings of the words are to a great extent expressed by a mere array of other words of similar signification. This fault, it is hoped, has been avoided here, an attempt having been made to fix and exhibit — after the manner of the larger work — the various shades of meaning of all the more important words by means of formal, discriminative definition, conveyed in brief descriptive sentences or clauses.

3. To words thus defined, Synonyms are often subjoined, printed in a separate paragraph, and in smaller type. The object is, after giving a clear conception of the peculiar import of a word, to bring others into view which have the same general signification, thus opening a wide range to a writer for selecting the most appropriate terms, and aiding him to acquire a varied and expressive diction. With the same end in view, synonymous words are carefully discriminated in numerous instances, the distinctive meaning of each being carefully drawn out, and a comparison made between them, showing the points of difference.

4. Etymology. A leading and novel feature of this Abridgment is the introduction, in a reduced form, of the etymologies of the new edition of the Quarto Dictionary, which work has been declared by eminent philological authorities to be "the best general etymologicon we yet possess of the English language." The value of this portion of the volume to those who desire to gain a thorough knowledge of their mother-tongue does not need to be enlarged upon.

5. The Pronunciation is that of the Quarto, upon which great care was bestowed, distinguished orthoëpists both in England and America having been consulted on doubtful points. The system of referring from the words in the vocabulary to the preliminary "Principles" is one which the consulter of the work will find exceedingly useful.

6. The Orthography, in disputed cases, — and these embrace only a few limited classes of words. — is to a great extent given both ways, though with a clear indication of the form to be preferred on the principles of Dr. Webster. In every instance, the form preferred has been sanctioned by distinguished English grammarians and orthoëpists, as Lowth, Walker, &c. Their claims to general adoption are based upon the fact that they are conformed to the acknowledged analogies of the language, and are designed merely to repress irregularities and remove petty exceptions. With both forms before him, every one can decide for himself which to adopt.

7. The Illustrative Engravings on wood, about six hundred in number, have been selected and engraved expressly for this work. They are intended, not for mere ornament, but to elucidate the meaning of words which cannot be satisfactorily explained without pictorial aid. "There is no knowledge of things," says Locke, "conveyed by men's words, when their ideas agree not to the reality of things. . . . The shape of a horse, or cassowary, will be but rudely and imperfectly imprinted on the mind by words; the sight of the animals doth it a thousand times better . . . Such things as these, which the eye distinguishes by their shapes, would be best let into the mind by draughts made of them, and more determine the signification of such words than any other words set for them, or made use of to define them."

III. Appendix. — The range of the Dictionary has been much extended by the addition to it of various useful vocabularies appropriate to the work as a manual of popular reference, as will be seen by an inspection of the Table of Contents on the ensuing page. Most of these vocabularies are abridged from those given in the larger work, but they will be found sufficiently comprehensive for all the ordinary wants of the general reader. The "Etymological Vocabulary of Modern Geographical Names" has been very carefully revised and somewhat enlarged by the aid of recent works of great value, and in its present state possesses increased accuracy and usefulness. The "Concise Account of the Chief Deities, Heroes, etc., in the Greek and Roman Mythology" was given in the previous edition of this work, but has now received numerous additions and emendations which render it more worthy of the public favor. The "Vocabulary of Perfect and Allowable Rhymes" — a peculiar feature of this edition — is based upon the corresponding "Index" in Walker's "Rhyming Dictionary"; but it is more copious and far more correct. Walker calls attention to the fact that "this collection of words," besides its designed and most obvious application, "is in some measure a dictionary of pronunciation, and may answer very useful purposes to foreigners and provincials, who, by understanding the sound of one word, may become acquainted with the pronunciation of a whole class." The "Glossary of Scottish Words and Phrases," with preliminary remarks on the peculiarities of Scottish pronunciation and orthography, — which is also a new and peculiar feature of this work, — has been prepared under the supervision of a native of Scotland, Mr. William Russell, who is well-known as an elocutionist and scholar. The evident superiority of this Glossary to all others of a similar kind, will doubtless cause it to be warmly welcomed by lovers of Scottish literature.

As a whole, it is hoped that this volume may fairly lay claim to the character of a "NATIONAL DICTIONARY," fully suited to meet the requirements of all who are seeking a standard reference-book of this nature.

In conclusion, it is due to Mr. William G. Webster to state that the editor has had the benefit of his co-operation in some portions of the work.

DORCHESTER, MASSACHUSETTS, August 10, 1867.

P. S. Since the publication of the edition of 1867, so many words have been introduced into the language, and the signification of so many words previously in use has been modified or enlarged, that it has seemed desirable to complete this work by copious additions. These find place in a Supplement which contains about 3,600 words with their definitions. For the most part they have been taken from the latest Supplement to "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary;" but other and still more recent publications have been freely consulted. There are also added full tables of the Metric System of Weights and Measures, with explanatory illustrations.

*** When one letter of an improper diphthong, or of a triphthong, is marked, it is to be taken as representing the sound of the combination, and the letter or letters which are not marked are to be regarded as silent; as in āim, clĕan, cĕil, pĕople, rŏute, sŏul, joŭrnal, tŏw, &c. The combined letters ce, ci, sci, se, si, or ti, occurring before a vowel in a syllable immediately preceded by an accented syllable, are generally equivalent to sh; as in o'cean, ce'ta'ceous, so'cial, logi'cian, suspi'cion, auspi'cious, con'science, nau'seous, controver'sial, dissen'sion, ini'tial, ora'tion, ficti'tious, &c. Such syllables are not always respelled, as, in general, they will naturally be pronounced correctly by an English speaker. But in all exceptional, doubtful, or difficult cases, the appropriate respelling is used.

*** For an explanation of foreign sounds occurring in the Dictionary, see pp. 911-15.

RESPELLING FOR PRONUNCIATION. — (1.) In respelling the French an, en, on, &c., the letters ng are not to be pronounced themselves, being designed simply to mark the vowel as nasal, that is, as pronounced through both the nose and the mouth at the same time. — (2.) The respelling of a word when a number of related words follow, applies to all of them down to some other word which is respelled.

REFERENCES. — The figures which immediately follow certain words in the Vocabulary refer to corresponding sections in the Principles of Pronunciation.

ACCENT. — The principal accent is denoted by a heavy mark; the secondary, by a lighter mark; as in Su'per-intend'ent. In the division of words into syllables, these marks, besides performing their proper office, supply the place of the hyphen, except in some compound and derivative words.

PRINCIPLES OF PRONUNCIATION,

WITH EXPLANATIONS OF THE KEY.

VOWELS.

§ 1. The vowel sounds in monosyllables and accented syllables are marked in the Dictionary by pointing the letters according to the Key. Each of the vowels will now be considered under three heads; viz., its regular long, and short, and its occasional sounds, as heard in monosyllables and in accented and unaccented syllables.

I. VOWELS IN MONOSYLLABLES AND ACCENTED SYLLABLES.

A.

§ 2. Regular long sound, marked  $\bar{A}$ ,  $\bar{a}$ , as in ale; heard also in pāin, dāy, gāol, gāuge, āye, breāk, veil, whēy, &c.

NOTE.—This sound of a is in most cases diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in  $\bar{e}$  annexed to its “radical” or initial sound, as in pay, where the y may be regarded as representing the vanish. Writers are not agreed as to the nature of the radical part, some considering it to be the sound of short e, while others assert that it is a distinct, though very similar, element, being like the other long vowels as compared with their true corresponding short sounds, of a slightly less open quality.—See § 11, and § 8, NOTE.

§ 3. Regular short sound, marked  $\check{A}$ ,  $\check{a}$ , as in add; heard also in plāid, bāde, &c.

NOTE.—This is a distinct element from the long a. Like the other shut or stopped vowels ( $\check{e}$ ,  $\check{i}$ ,  $\check{o}$ ,  $\check{u}$ ,  $\check{oo}$ ), its sound is exceedingly short, and has a certain abrupt, explosive character, which is hardly found in any language but our own. With respect to its position in the scale of sounds, it is a palatal vowel, intermediate between  $\check{a}$  and  $\check{e}$ , the tongue being raised higher than for  $\check{a}$ , and not so high as for  $\check{e}$ .

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF A.

§ 4. Sound of a before r, in such words as air, care, fare, bear, prayer, parent, marked  $\hat{A}$ ,  $\hat{a}$ . The letter e has the same sound in a few words, such as there, where, their, heir, &c.

Two errors in opposite extremes are here to be avoided: 1. That of the vulgar, who pronounce where, whar; bear, bar; care'ful, car'ful, &c.; 2. That of some among the educated classes, who pronounce pair, parent, &c., as if spelt pay'er, pay'rent, &c.

Some have considered the a in care as a distinct element; this, however is not admitted by Smart, who maintains that it is our long a in fate, and owes all its peculiarity to the subsequent r. Such, also, is the statement of Dr. Webster and most English orthoëpists. The sound of r in these words is what Smart calls a “guttural vibration,”—a sound which he represents by ur, and Dr. Webster by er. In care we touch lightly on the  $\bar{a}$  sound (the radical alone, without the vanish; see § 2), and then pass fully and strongly into the guttural vibration ( $\bar{c}\bar{a}$ 'ur or  $\bar{c}\bar{a}$ 'cr), drawing the two as closely as possible into the same syllable—so closely that Smart (not aiming at philosophical exactness) speaks of the r as actually blending with the previous vowel. In like manner, parent is sounded  $\bar{p}\bar{a}$ 'ur-ent, or  $\bar{p}\bar{a}$ 'er-ent; and fairy has the sound of  $\bar{f}\bar{a}$ 'er-y, as the word was actually spelt by Spenser in his “Faery Queen.” Smart refers, also, with approbation, to another mode of identifying the sound in question; viz., that of prolonging our short e before r. Thus, ther (with the e as in thēn), drawn out into long quantity, gives us there ( $\bar{t}\bar{h}\bar{a}r$ ); and er (the first syllable in error) gives us ere or e'er ( $\bar{a}r$ ). Thus, in the view here presented, the initial sound should always be that of a in fate (the radical without the vanish; see § 2), though the final impression upon the ear is that of an open or broad sound, in consequence of the “opening power” of the r. In primitive words like flare, lair, pair, and the others mentioned above, it is very important not to dwell so long on the a as to make it diphthongal; for, if the close vanishing element of the vowel is retained, it is impossible for the open r to blend with it in the same syllable. But in derivative words like flayer, layer, payer, it is essential to preserve the terminational sound of the a, in order to keep up a distinction between the two classes.

Some, however, especially in New England, give these words a slightly different sound; viz., that of our short a before the r, in air, pronounced  $\check{a}er$ , with a somewhat lengthened sound of the  $\check{a}$ . So hurry, with the first syllable protracted, gives us hairry. This sound is rather more open than the one mentioned above, and is apt, in the mouths of our common people, to become too broad and coarse. If well executed, however, it is scarcely at all inferior to the other in smoothness and grace. It is frequently heard among the well-educated in England; there is a tendency in many to intermingle the two, and it often requires a nice ear to determine which is used. Dr. Webster, who adopted the former in his own practice, once remarked to the writer that he regarded the difference as unimportant, provided the New England sound be given without coarseness or undue breadth.

§ 5. Sound of the Italian a, marked  $\check{A}$ ,  $\check{a}$ , as in arm, fāther, fār; heard also in āh, heārth, āunt, guārd, āre, &c.

NOTE.—This sound occurs in monosyllables and in the accented syllable of many words, before r final or r followed by another consonant (as in scar, tar, tart, yard, de-bar', de-part'), and in the derivatives of such words (as in scarred, tarry, of, or resembling, tar, debarring). But when a occurs in an accented syllable, before r followed by a vowel or by another r, in a word not a derivative, it has its regular short sound, as in arable, barrow, tarry, to delay.

The Italian a is the most open of all the vowel sounds, and is one of the extremes of the vowel scale, the other extremes being  $\bar{e}$ , and  $\bar{o}$ . In its formation the mouth and throat are opened widely, and the tongue is left in its natural position of rest. It was formerly much more common in English than it is at the present day. The loss of it to so great an extent has been an injury to our language, and any further exclusion of it is therefore undesirable.

§ 6. Sound of a in certain words (chiefly monosyllables) ending in ff, ft, ss, st, sk, sp, with a few in nce, and nt, marked  $\hat{A}$ ,  $\hat{a}$ , as in stāff, grāft, pāss, lāst, āsk, gāsp, chānce, chant, &c.

NOTE. Down to the close of the last century, words of this class were universally pronounced with the full Italian a. Some, especially among the vulgar, gave this too broadly, or with a kind of drawl (as pass like pahss, fast like fahst), so that Walker, disgusted with this abuse, and having a prejudice against intermediate sounds, marked all such words in his Dictionary by the sound of short a, giving the vowel in past, staff, &c., the sound of that in pät, Stäffa (the island), &c. It will not be surprising — if we bear in mind the remark in § 3 on the extreme shortness and abruptness of this sound — that this change was strongly condemned by the orthoëpists. Jones declared it to be “a mining affectation;” and Mitford said, “No English tongue fails to express, no English ear to perceive, the difference between the sound of a in passing and in pässive. No colloquial familiarity will substitute the one for the other.” Still, the high character of Walker, and the increasing disgust for every thing like a drawl in speaking, gave currency to the change. It prevailed in London, and in some of the larger cities of America, until there sprung up, on both sides of the Atlantic, what Smart has called a “new school” and an “old school” on this subject. The extreme shortness of the a as marked by Walker, was still objected to; and Smart, in his Dictionary, first published in 1836, censured Walker on this account, saying, “He allows no compromise between the broad Italian a, with which a vulgar mouth pronounces ass, and the sound narrower (if possible) than the a in at, with which an affected speaker minces the same word.” He therefore spoke of a “medium sound” of the a in words of this class, saying, “We are apt, even in London, to give a slight prolongation to the vowel (ä) which would, in other cases, be quite rustic.” This prolongation has passed into America, and is now heard extensively among the followers of Walker in this country. It is a kind of drawl on the a in such words as läst, päst, fäst, &c. Smart states, however, in a recent letter, that in England this prolongation is now wholly laid aside. “Custom with us,” he remarks, “is much changed. It is no longer affectation to say äss; and gränt, gräft, &c., at present indicate the pronunciation of well-educated London people under sixty-five or sixty years of age.” In other words, Walker’s extreme short sound of stäff, like Stäffa, and päss like pässive, is now adopted by many Londoners as the true and only proper sound.

The change introduced by Walker never had any great currency in this country, except in a few large cities and in places immediately affected by their influence. Our leading lexicographers, Webster and Worcester, declared against it. Many who were taught it in childhood have since laid it aside; and there is an increasing disposition among our teachers and literary men to unite on some intermediate sound between the extreme broadness, or length, of the a in father, and the extreme narrowness, or shortness of the a in fat. That of Smart (mentioned above as now disused) was intermediate in quantity; and so also is another, which Fulton and Knight have introduced into their Dictionary, viz., a shortened sound of the Italian a. They give the word “lard” as an example of the long Italian sound (as in father, &c.), and “last” of their short Italian sound; and mark with the latter the entire class of words now under consideration, such as staff, graft, pass, last, ask, gasp, and a few words in nee and nt, as dance and chant. In this way they guard against that undue prolongation of the ä which offended Walker, and still retain in use one of the finest sounds of our language. This is the sound recommended in this volume, and marked A, ä. Some might possibly prefer one a little less open, verging slightly more towards that of a in an; and there is certainly room here for a diversity of taste and practice among those who agree in the main point of rejecting the extreme shortness of Walker’s sound. If it be proposed, however, to give these words a sound intermediate in quality between the Italian a and our short a, one thing is important to be considered. Mr. Smart states, in answer to an inquiry on the subject, that, although he can exemplify such a sound, he is not aware that any thing of the kind is used among the educated classes in England. The only alternative there seems to be between the Italian a and the extreme short sound of Walker; and it is natural and desirable that those among us who reject the latter should adopt the same sound with those who led the way in that rejection upon the other side of the Atlantic. Any one who heard the lectures of Mr. Thackeray during his visit to this country in 1855-6, and noticed his pronunciation with reference to this subject, must have been struck with the definite sound of the Italian a which he gave to all words of this class. He even gave that sound in the word answer, which, though common in England, is comparatively rare in America. A gentleman who held for many years a high diplomatic station at the court of St. James, told the writer that, except among Londoners, he almost uniformly heard the Italian a in such cases, especially among the officers of government, and the nobility and gentry with whom he was led to associate. Such, also, is said by members of Oxford and Cambridge to be the ease now at those universities; and some of the most eminent preachers of the kingdom, such as the Bishop of Oxford (Wilberforce), have been mentioned in confirmation of this remark. It is for such reasons that the words in question are here marked with a shortened or brief sound of the Italian a, in accordance with the views and practice of Dr. Webster.

§ 7. Sound of broad a, marked A, ä, as in all, talk, haul, swarm; heard also in sauce, awe, geörgic, förk, gröat, böught, &c.

NOTE. — This has sometimes been called the German a, but is a broader and more guttural sound, being formed by a depression of the larynx, and a consequent retraction of the tongue, which enlarges the cavity of the mouth posteriorly.

§ 8. Short sound of broad a, marked A, ä, as in what, wander, wallow, &c.; heard also in knowledge.

NOTE. — This is the extreme short sound of broad a, and coincides with the sound of o in not. It differs, however, in quality as well as quantity from broad a, being a more open sound; that is to say, the aperture of the lips and the internal cavity of the mouth, though of the same shape in both cases, are somewhat larger for the former (a) than for the latter (ä), while the position of the tongue remains unaltered throughout. Nor is this difference peculiar to a and ä; it also exists between the other pairs of vowel sounds that have essentially the same organic formation, but differ in length or duration: in each case, that which is the briefer in quantity is the more open in quality of the two.

There is a sound of a, as heard in salt, although, &c., which is intermediate between that in awe and that in what. No distinctive mark is used to indicate this intermediate sound, but the inquirer is referred to this section from all words in the vocabulary in which the sound occurs. — See § 21, NOTE.

§ 9. An exceptional sound of a occurs in the words any, many. It is as if they were spelled än’y, mën’y, being the regular short sound of e.

E.

§ 10. Regular long sound, marked E, ē, as in ēve, mēte, &c.; heard also in Cæsar, bēard, feet, lēisure, pēople, kēy, machīne, fiēld, cæsofagus, quay, &c.

NOTE. — In the formation of this element, the tongue is raised convexly within the dome of the palate, pressing against its sides, and leaving only the smallest possible passage through which a vowel sound can be uttered. E is therefore the closest lingual or palatal vowel, and is one of the extremes of the natural vowel scale, a and oo being the other extremes.

§ 11. Regular short sound, marked Ĕ, ĕ, as in ĕnd, mĕt; heard also in many, aphæresis, said, says, fĕather, hĕifer, lĕopard, friĕnd, asafetida, bury, guĕss.

NOTE. — This is not a short sound of the long e. It has usually been considered as the shut or extreme short sound of the a in fate; but most orthoëpists at the present day, while allowing it to be a nearly related sound, regard it as distinct, being slightly more open than the radical part of ä, and lacking the vanish: both are intermediate between a and ē, the tongue not being so much depressed as for the former, nor raised so high toward the palate as for the latter. — See § 2, and § 3, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF E.

§ 12. Sound of e like â (as in care, fair, bear, &c.) marked Ê, ê, as in êre, thêre, hêir, ê’er, &c. This, as is stated in § 4, is the same sound with that of a in care. — See § 4.

§ 13. Sound of e like â, marked Ē, ē, as in ĕh, ĕight, prey, vein, &c. — See § 2.

NOTE. — This is essentially the sound which this letter generally has in the leading modern languages of Continental Europe.

§ 14. Sound of e before r, verging toward the sound of u in urge, marked Ë, ē, as in ĕrmine, vĕrge, prefĕr; heard also in ĕarnest, mĕrth, myrtle, &c.

NOTE.—The case here contemplated is that of e before r, in a monosyllable or in an accented syllable in which the r is not followed by a vowel or by another r, or in derivatives of such words, when the syllable retains its accent, as in herd, defer, deferring, err, erring, term, mercy, maternal. When e occurs before r, followed by a vowel or by another r, in a word not derived as above, it either has the short sound, as in ferry, peril, perilous, heritage, ferule, or the long sound, as in period, hero, material.

The vulgar universally, and many cultivated speakers both in England and America, give the e in such words the full sound of u in urge, as, murcy for mērcy, turm for tērm, &c. But, in the most approved style of pronunciation, the organs are placed in a position intermediate between that requisite for sounding û and that for sounding ě, thus making (as Smart observes) “a compromise between the two.” In other words, this element is radically distinct from both û and ě, being less guttural than the former and less palatal than the latter, from which it was doubtless originally evolved.

I.

§ 15. Regular long sound, marked  $\bar{I}$ ,  $\bar{i}$ , as in ice; heard also in aisle, height, cijing, eije, vīe, guile, buī, thī, rīe, &c.; in pint, in child, mild, wild; and in monosyllables ending with nd, as bind, find, kind, &c., except wind, meaning air in motion, and wind, to scent, to cause to lose or to recover wind or breath.

NOTE.—This sound, though represented by a single character, is not a simple element, but a diphthong. It is composed of a and ē as extremes, with the a accented, but made so very brief that the ear with difficulty recognizes the precise character of the sound.

§ 16. Regular short sound, marked  $\check{I}$ ,  $\check{i}$ , as in ill; heard also in English, beaufin, been, sieve, women, busy, guinea, nymph, &c.

NOTE.—This is not a short sound of long i. Many have considered it as the shut or extreme short sound of long e; but it is really a distinct, though closely allied, element, and is so regarded by the best orthoëpists at the present time. In its formation, the tongue is slightly relaxed from the position assumed for producing ē; this is the only difference between the two sounds.—See § 3, NOTE, and § 8, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF I.

§ 17. Sound of i like that of long e, marked  $\bar{I}$ ,  $\bar{i}$ , as in pique, machine, caprice, &c.—See § 10.

NOTE.—This is appropriately the sound of i in all foreign languages. Most of the English words in which this sound is represented by this letter are from the French.

§ 18. Sound of i before r, verging toward u in urge, marked  $\bar{I}$ ,  $\bar{i}$ , as in irksome, virgin, thirsty, &c., identical with that of e in ermine.

NOTE.—I in this case is sounded by many speakers like û, as vurgin for virgin. The observations made under § 14 as to short e in words like ermine, verdure, &c., apply fully to this sound of the i.

O.

§ 19. Regular long sound, marked  $\bar{O}$ ,  $\bar{o}$ , as in old; heard also in hautboy, beau, yeoman, sew, rōam, hōe, dōor, shōulder, grōw, ōwe, &c.

NOTE.—This sound of o is in most cases diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in oo annexed to the “radical” or initial sound, as in below, where the w may be regarded as representing the vanish. The radical part of the sound is a simple element, intermediate with respect to the mode of its formation, between a and oo, the tongue being less depressed than for a, and the labial aperture greater than for oo. It is essentially the same element as that described in the next section, but of a slightly less open quality. The vanish of the o is omitted in unaccented syllables, as in o-pin'ion, to-bac'co, &c., but ought not to be omitted elsewhere. This remark is important as bearing on a very prevalent error, which will be mentioned in the next section.

§ 20. It is exceedingly common, in some parts of the United States, to shorten the long o of certain words, as volt, most, only, &c., by dropping the vanishing element which belongs to the vowel, and giving to the radical portion a somewhat more open quality; but this practice is wholly opposed to English usage. The provincialism here pointed out obtains, more or less widely, in respect to the following words, viz.: boat, bolster, bolt, bone, both, broke, broken, choke, cloak, close, a., coach, coat, coax, colt, colter, comb, dolt, folks, goad, hold, holm, holster, home, homely, hope, jolt, load, molten, most, molt, none, only, open, pole, polka, poultice, poultry, revolt, road, rode, rogue, soap, sloth, smoke, sofa, sol (the name of the note G of the musical scale), spoke, v., spoken, stone, story, swollen (or swoln), throat, toad, upholsterer, upholstery, whole, wholly, wholesome, wrote, yoke, yolk, and possibly a few others. Most persons in New England sound the o in a part or all of these words without the vanish, while some among the vulgar go farther, and give to a number of them almost the sound of short u, as, hum for home, &c. They should all, however, have the full sound of the o as heard in accented syllables, though not in all cases with quite the same prolongation of the sound. Thus the full o of dome should be given to home; of hole to whole; of slope to hope; of poach to coach; of moat to coat; of joke to spoke, cloak, smoke, and broke; of hone to bone and stone; and similarly in the other cases. Still the theoretic phonologist can not but regard the true short o described in this section as an important and legitimate member of the family of vowel sounds, and must look upon its absence in the established orthoëpy of our language as a defect and an anomaly. To him, therefore, its rise and growth in the popular speech are interesting facts, and its final prevalence and admittance to equal rights with the other vowels is a thing he would rather desire than deprecate.

§ 21. Regular short sound, marked  $\check{O}$ ,  $\check{o}$ , as in odd, nōt; heard also in wander, knowledge, &c.—See § 3, NOTE, and § 9.

NOTE.—This is the shut or extreme short sound of broad a, and coincides with the sound of a in what. There is a medium sound of this letter which is neither so short as in not, nor so long as in naught. This medium sound is usually given to the short o when directly followed by ss, st, and th, as in cross, cost, broth; also in gone, cough, trough, off, and some other words. To give the extreme short sound to such words is affectation: to give them the full sound of broad a is vulgar.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF O.

§ 22. Sound of o like short u, marked  $\acute{O}$ ,  $\acute{o}$ , as in óther, dóve, &c.; heard also in dóes, gūn, flood, dóuble, &c.—See § 31.

§ 23. Sound of o like ō long, marked  $\mathring{O}$ ,  $\mathring{o}$ , as in próve, dq, móve, tomb, &c.—See § 26.

§ 24. Sound of o like ō short, marked  $\mathring{O}$ ,  $\mathring{o}$ , as in bosom, wolf, woman, &c.—See § 8, NOTE, and § 27.

NOTE.—This sound coincides with that of u in bull, which is also used for oo short.—See § 33.

§ 25. Sound of o like a (broad a), marked  $\hat{O}$ ,  $\hat{o}$ , as in órder, fórm, stórk, &c.—See § 7.

NOTE.—The letter o generally has this sound when it occurs before r in a monosyllable (as in fór, fórm, lord, nórk) or in an accented syllable when not followed by a vowel or by another r, as in fórm'er, ór'chard, abhór', and also in the derivatives of such words, as in fórmed, nórk'ern, abhór'ring. But when o occurs, in an accented syllable, before r followed by a vowel or by another r in a word not a derivative, it has its regular short sound, as in fór'eign, ór'ange, tór'rid. These two sounds of o, viz., the broad, like that of a in call, and the short, like that of a in what, have been confounded by some orthoëpists; but there is an obvious difference between them, not only in quantity, but also in quality, the short vowel being more open than the broad.—See § 8, NOTE.

OO.

§ 26. Regular long or open sound, marked  $\bar{OO}$ ,  $\bar{oo}$ , as in mōon, fōod; heard also in rheum, drew, to, canoe, manœuvre, group, rude, rue, recruit, &c.

NOTE. — This sound is the same element with the u of the Germans, Spaniards, and Italians, and coincides with the French ou in route. It is the closest labial vowel; that is to say, in forming it, the lips are more nearly closed than for any other vowel, the sides being brought into contact with each other so as to leave only a small central aperture for the escape of the voice.

§ 27. Regular short sound of oo, marked  $\text{ŌŌ}$ ,  $\text{ōō}$ , as in wōol, fōot; heard also in wōlf, shōuld, bull, &c. — See § 8, NOTE.

§ 28. The following words, room, root, roof, rood, broom, and soon, have properly the long sound of oo, as in fōōd (see § 26); but many pronounce them with the short sound, as in foot (see § 27). New Englanders especially are often recognized abroad by their habit of pronouncing rōōm, rōōm; rōōt, rōōt; rōōf, rōōf; rōōd, rōōd; brōōm, brōōm, and sōōn, sōōn.

U.

§ 29. Regular long sound, marked  $\text{Ū}$ ,  $\text{ū}$ , as in mūte, ūnit, &c.; heard also in beautūy, feōdal, feūd, pew, ewe, lieū, view, cūe, sūit, yew, you, yule, &c.

NOTE. — This is a compound sound, formed of the vowel oo, with a slight sound of the consonant y or of the vowel ē or ī before it. When the u begins a syllable, or is preceded by any one of the palatal or labial sounds k, g, p, b, f, v, m, the sound of y is clearly perceived, as in the words usage, cube, gules, puny, burin, futile, mule.

§ 30. When the long u is preceded, in the same syllable, by any one of the consonants d, t, l, n, s, and th, it is peculiarly difficult to introduce the sound of y; and hence negligent speakers omit it entirely, pronouncing duty, dooty; tune, toon; lute, loot; nuisance, noosance; suit, soot; thurable, thoorible, &c. The reason is, that, in forming these consonants, the organs are in a position to pass with perfect ease to the sound of oo, while it is very difficult in doing so to touch the intermediate y; hence the y in such cases is very apt to be dropped. On this point Smart remarks, "To say tube (tyoob), lucid (lyoocid), with the u as perfect [i. e. with a distinct sound of y prefixed to oo] as in cube, cubic, mute, &c., is either northern or laboriously pedantic," — a description which applies to the vulgar in our Eastern States, and to those who are over-nice at the South. The practice of good society is to let the y sink into a very brief sound of long e or of short i, both of which have a very close organic relationship to consonant y. Special care must be taken not only to make this sound as brief as possible, but to pronounce it in the same syllable with the oo. We thus avoid the two extremes, of overdoing, on the one hand, by making too much of the y, and, on the other hand, of sounding only the oo after the manner of careless speakers.

It ought to be added that wherever the sound of sh or of zh precedes the u, the y is omitted, as in sure, sounded shoor; sugar, shōōgar, azure, azh'oor, &c.

§ 31. Regular short sound, marked  $\text{Ū}$ ,  $\text{ū}$ , as in būt; heard also in sūn, dōes, blōod, tōuch, &c.

NOTE. — This is not the short sound of long u. It is a distinct and simple element, and derives its peculiar guttural character from the influence of the pharynx and back part of the mouth. In its organic formation, it is essentially the same sound as u in urge, but is shorter in quantity, and of a rather more open quality. — See § 3, NOTE, and § 8, NOTE.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF U.

§ 32. Sound of u when preceded by r in the same syllable, marked  $\text{Ū}$ ,  $\text{ū}$ , as in rūde, rūmor, rūral, &c.

NOTE. — All the English orthoëpists agree that the u in this case drops the y or ī which is generally an element of its compound sound when preceded, in the same syllable, by any other consonant than r, and becomes simply ōō, so that rue is pronounced rōō; rule, rōōl; ruby, rōōby, &c.

§ 33. Sound of u like that of short oo ( $\text{ōō}$ ), marked  $\text{Ū}$ , $\text{ū}$ , as in bull, put, push, pull, &c. — See § 8, NOTE, and § 27.

§ 34. Sound of u before r in such words as urge, burn, furl, concur, &c., marked  $\text{Ū}$ ,  $\text{ū}$ ; heard also in worm, journey, &c.

NOTE. — This is often called the natural vowel, because it requires almost no effort to utter it, the mouth being slightly opened in the easiest or most natural and unconstrained manner for the passage of voice in a nearly unmodified form. But the name is scarcely appropriate; for the sound is altogether wanting in many languages, and — with the single exception of the English — it occupies a comparatively subordinate place in the vowel systems of the principal tongues in which it occurs. It has been more aptly termed the neutral vowel, with reference to its want of any strongly-marked distinctive character; and this name is here adopted as, on the whole, preferable to any other. The sound differs from that of short u (with which it has often been identified) in length, and in a somewhat greater degree of closeness. (See § 8, NOTE.) It occurs, in monosyllables, before r not followed by a vowel (as in cur, fur, furl, hurt, burst, purr); in accented syllables, before r final or r followed by one or more consonants different from itself (as in recur, curfew, furlong, disbursed); and in derivatives from any such words (as currish, furry, purring, recurring). Except in the cases here specified, the letter u before r has its short sound, as in cūr'ry, hūr'ry.

Y.

§ 35. Regular long sound, marked  $\text{Ȳ}$ ,  $\text{ȳ}$ , as in flȳ, stȳle, skȳ, edifȳ, &c.

NOTE. — This is the same sound as long i. — See § 15.

§ 36. Regular short sound, marked  $\text{Ȳ}$ ,  $\text{ȳ}$ , as in cȳst, nȳmph, lȳric, abȳss, coinciding with the sound of short i. — See § 16.

OCCASIONAL SOUND OF Y.

§ 37. Y has only one occasional sound; viz., in such words as myrrh, myrtle, in which it has, like the e and i in similar circumstances (see § 14 and § 18), very nearly the sound of u in urge. This is indicated in the Dictionary by respelling, the words in which y has this sound being very few in number.

II. REGULAR OR PROPER DIPHTHONGS.

OI or OY.

§ 38. The sound of oi or oy (unmarked), as heard in oil, join, oyster, &c.

NOTE. — The elements of this diphthong are o as in cord (the same as broad a), and ī as in fin (short i), with the accent on the former. Oy is always regular in English words, and oi is regular also, except in the following cases; viz., avoirdupois (av-ur-du-poiz'), connoisseur (kon-is-soor'), shamois (sham'my), choir (kwire), tortoise (tor'tis), turquois (sometimes pronounced tur-keez').

Until near the beginning of the present century, oi was extensively pronounced like long i, as jine for join, rile for roil, &c.; but this pronunciation is now confined exclusively to the lowest classes.

OW.

§ 39. The sound of ow (unmarked), as heard in owl, vowel, flower, &c.

NOTE. — This diphthong is compounded of the elements ō and oo, the former of which is accented, but made extremely brief. In a considerable number of words, ow represents the sound of long o; in the single word knowledge and in its derivatives, it has the sound of short o. These are accordingly distinguished by the proper mark, as, blōw, slōw, knōw, knōwledge, &c.

OU.

§ 40. This diphthong has two leading sounds.

(1.) That of ow in words derived from the Anglo-Saxon, as in out, hound, &c.

(2.) That of oo in words derived from the French, as in soup, group, &c.

§ 41. The diphthong ou has also, in a number of words, the sound of long o, as in soul; in a few cases, the sound of the broad a, as in bought (bawt); sometimes that of short u, as in couple; sometimes that of u in urge, as in adjourn (adjurn); and, in the three words could, would, should, that of oo as in foot. These peculiarities are indicated in this Dictionary by the appropriate mark over the significant or sounded vowel, or by respelling.

III. VOWELS IN UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

§ 42. When an unaccented syllable ends in a consonant, its vowel, if single, has, in strict theory, its regular short or shut sound, though uttered somewhat more faintly, or with a less proportionate force, than in an accented syllable, as in ās-sign', con'dūct, con'flict, &c. In many words of this class, however, the vowel is apt to suffer a change or corruption of its distinctive quality, passing over into some sound of easier utterance. Thus the vowel sounds in the unaccented syllables ar, er, ir, or, yr (as in altar, offer, tapir, mirror, zephyr), are coincident with that of the second u in sulphur. As a general rule, a and o, in unaccented syllables ending in a consonant, verge toward, or fall into, the sound of short u, particularly in colloquial discourse, as in bal'lad, bar'rack, ver'bal, bed'lam, cap'stan, jal'ap, bi'as, bal'last, hav'oc, meth'od, pis'tol, ven'om, compel', flag'on, bish'op, pi'lot, prov'ost. In such words, it would ordinarily be the merest pedantry or affectation to give the vowel its regular short sound.

The vowel e, in unaccented syllables ending in a consonant, is, in some words, liable to be sounded like short i (as in barrel), and, in others, like short u (as in silent); but these changes are usually avoided by good speakers.

It may here be remarked, that some of the diphthongs are similarly affected by the absence of accent. Thus ai, which, in an accented syllable, is usually sounded like long a (as in com-plāin'), sinks into ē or ī in an unaccented syllable, as in mountain, pronounced moun'tēn or moun'tīn. So ei, ey, and ie become changed in pronunciation into ī (as in sur'feit, hon'eŷ, car'ried), and ou is sounded as ū (as in griev'oūs).

It is also to be observed, that, in the unaccented syllables of some words from the Latin, the vowel is long, though followed by a consonant in the same syllable, as in cantharidēs; but, in such cases, the long mark is, in the Dictionary, placed over the vowel.

§ 43. When the unaccented syllable does not end in a consonant, two cases arise; viz., —

(1.) The syllable may consist of, or may end in, a vowel, as in the words a-bound', di-rect', e-vent', mo-lest', &c.

(2.) The syllable may end in a consonant with final e mute at the close of words, as in ul'ti-mate, fi'nite, rep'tile, &c.

The former of these will, for the sake of brevity, be called No. 1, the latter No. 2. These will now be considered under each of the vowels.

A.

§ 44. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the a has properly a brief sound of the Italian a, as in Cu'ba, a-muse', A-mer'i-ca; but, in familiar speech, it is almost always so slighted and obscured as to be indistinguishable from the neutral vowel, or u in urge, murmur, &c. In some words, like ā-e'ri-al, chā-ot'ic, &c., the a has its regular long or name sound, somewhat shortened by the omission of the "vanish." This is due to the influence of the subsequent vowel, which, in fluent utterance, refuses to take the Italian a before it without the intervention of one or more consonants. Some speakers in this country give the same brief sound of long a to this letter when it occurs in an initial unaccented syllable followed by a consonant in an accented syllable, as in a-bound', fa-tal'i-ty; but this practice is not sanctioned by the best orthoëpists. In the terminations -a-ny and -a-ry, the a has usually the same sound as short e unaccented, as in mis'cel-la-ny, mo'ment-a-ry, &c.

§ 45. (No. 2. See § 43.) Here the a has sometimes its long sound, particularly in verbs ending in ate, as, ded'i-cāte, ed'u-cāte, &c. In other parts of speech, the sound of the a is more obscure, verging toward short e, as in ul'ti-mate, night'in-gale, pref'ace, &c. In some instances it is apt to verge toward short i, as in vil'lage.

E.

§ 46. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the e has its long sound, slightly obscure or abridged, as in e-vent', e-mo'tion, so-ci'e-ty, &c. Care should be taken not to sink the e into an indefinite sound of short u, as, soci'ūty for society, &c.

§ 47. (No. 2. See § 43.) Here, also, the e has usually its long sound a little shortened and slighted, as in ob'so-lete. In a few instances, it verges toward short e, as in college.

I.

There is great diversity in the case of this letter. Hence it is difficult to lay down general rules; and, as Smart remarks, "The inquirer must be sent to the Dictionary to learn, in each particular case, the true pronunciation."

§ 48. (No. 1. See § 43.) I, when final in a syllable, has more commonly its short sound, as in phī-los'o-phy, dī-rect', &c. But the i is usually long in the initial syllables i, bi, chi, cli, cri, pri, tri, as in ī-de'a, bī-ol'o-gy, erī-te'ri-on, prī-me'val, &c.

§ 49. (No. 2. See § 43.) In these terminations, usage is greatly divided. On the whole, the i is more generally short, as in ac-com'plīce, in'fi-nīte, fer'tīle, mar'i-tīme, ad-a-man'tīne, an'īsc, pos'i-tīve, &c.; but there are some important exceptions, as, cock'a-trīce, ex'īle, gen'tīle, con'cu-bīne, ar'chīve, &c.; also all names of minerals ending in lite or ite; as, chrys'o-līte, ste'a-tīte, &c. Here the Dictionary must be consulted for the several words. According to Smart and Cull, chemical terms ending in ide (as bromide, chloride, &c.) should be pronounced with the i long; but all other orthoëpists are unanimous in making the vowel short; and the propriety of the latter mode of pronunciation is established by the fact that this whole class of words is not unfrequently spelt without the final e, thus, bromid, chlorid.

O.

§ 50. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the o has usually its long sound slightly abbreviated, and without its "vanish" (see § 19), as in o-pin'ion, croc'o-dile, to-bac'co, &c. Care should here be taken not to sink the o into short u, as careless speakers often do, pronouncing o-pin'ion, up-pin'ion, &c. An exception, however, is perhaps to be made in the case of the terminations -o-ny and -o-ry, in which, according to universal usage in England, the o is sounded like short u unaccented, as in mat'ri-mo-ny, prom'is-so-ry, &c. Yet most speakers in this country give the o in such words its long sound, slightly abbreviated, as in other unaccented syllables. The practice — too common among us — of laying a secondary accent on the o is a fault which should be sedulously avoided. — See § 110.

§ 51. (No. 2. See § 43.) The o in these terminations has usually its regular long sound, as in tel'e-scōpe, ep'ōde, &c. Sometimes it has the sound of short o, as in di'a-lōgue; in other cases, it verges toward short u, as in pur'pose.

U.

§ 52. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here the u generally has its long sound slightly abridged, as in ac'cu-rate, e-mol'u-ment, man-u-mit', an'nu-al, dep'u-tize, u-til'i-ty. But when the u is preceded by d, t, or s, these combinations, du, tu, and su, are by the great majority of speakers changed into joo, choo, and shoo or zhoo, respectively, as in ed' u-cate (ěj'oo-kate), ha-bit/u-al (ha-bích'oo-al), sen'su-ous (sěn/shoo-us), vis'u-al (vřzh'oo-ai). (See §§ 66, 77, 92, 93, 95, and 107.) In the notation of words of this class in the Dictionary, the regular pronunciation is generally given instead of the irregular, in conformity with the views of Dr. Webster; but, in many instances, reference is made to the remarks contained in the present section. When the u is preceded by r, it simply drops the y sound, and is pronounced oo, as in er-u-dition (er-oo-dish'un). (See § 32.)

§ 53. (No. 2. See § 43.) The u in these terminations should generally retain its regular long sound (see §§ 29, 30) slightly abridged, as in grat'i-tūde, iu/sti-tūte, rid'i-cūle, trib'ūte, im-post/hūme, sub'ter-fūgc, &c. There are a few exceptions, as min'ute (min'it), n., and let'tuce (let'tis). If the letter r precedes the u, the initial element of the vowel is dropped, as in ce'ruse (se'roos), per'uke (pěr'ook), &c. (See § 32.) On the other hand, when the u is immediately preceded by the letter t, it should never be changed into mere oo, as grat'i-tood for grat'i-tūde, in'sti-toot for in'sti-tūte—a practice which prevails among the vulgar.

The terminations dure, ture, and sure, though sometimes pronounced with the regular sounds of the letters, are more commonly pronounced joor, choor, and shoor or zhoor, respectively, as in the words tem'per-a-tūre (tem'per-a-choor), ver'dure (ver'joor), cy'no-sure (si'no-shoor), ex-po'sure (eks-po'zhoor). (See §§ 66, 77, 92, 93, 95, and 107.) When these terminations are immediately preceded by an accented syllable, many speakers change them still further into chur, jur, and shur, or zhur, as in na'ture (na'chur), ver'dure (ver'jur), cen'sure (sen'shur), ex-po'sure (eks-po'zhur). The Dictionary follows the practice of Dr. Webster in giving to dure and ture the regular sounds of d, t, and u (pronouncing verdure, věr'd'yoor, creature, kreet'yoor, &c.), while sure is respelt shoor or zhoor, as in the examples given above. This, it is true, is an inconsistency; but it is one of little moment, inasmuch as general usage is so fluctuating, and as reference is in most cases made to the present section.

Y.

§ 54. (No. 1. See § 43.) Here y has usually its short sound, as in hř-poc'ri-sř, mř-thol'o-gř, van'i-tř, mer'ri-lř, proph'e-cř, &c.; but verbs ending in fy have the y long, as in jus'tifř, mag'ni-fř, &c. also the three verbs, oc'cu-př, mul'ti-plř, proph'e-sř.

§ 55. (No. 2. See § 43.) The y in these terminations (which are few in number) is generally long, as in an'o-dřne, per'i-střle, ne'o-phřte, pros'e-lřte, &c.

IV. SILENT VOWELS.

§ 56. Vowels which are printed in Italics are not to be sounded, as the e in used, burden, the i in cousin, &c. Some of these cases require a more particular consideration, and will now be mentioned.

E final.

§ 57. The letter e is always mute when final, except in monosyllables containing no other vowel, in classical words, and in some words from modern foreign languages; but, in a monosyllable or in an accented syllable of a word, though silent, it generally serves the purpose of indicating that a preceding single vowel followed by a single consonant, a consonant digraph, or the combined letters st or ng, has its regular long sound, as in plane, hope, cube, inscribe, paste, change. When a silent e follows c or g at the end of a word, it serves also to show that the consonant is to have its soft, and not its hard, sound, as in ace, nice, age, huge, oblige. In a number of monosyllables (as bāde, come, give, wēre, done, &c.) and in the accented syllables of a few words derived from them (as forbāde', becōme', forgīve'), the e does not have its usual effect of lengthening the sound of the preceding vowel. In unaccented syllables, it sometimes keeps the vowel iu its long sound, as in gen'tile, su'pīne, fi'nite, ar'chive; but in a great many instances it exercises no such influence, as in jus'tice, hos'tile, mar'i-tīme, doc'trine, an'ise, gran'ite, plain'tive.

EN with E silent.

§ 58. Most words ending in en drop the e in pronunciation, as, often (of'n), heaven (heav'n), even (ev'n), &c. One of the most prevalent errors of the present day, especially among our clergy (for the laity have fallen into it much less), is that of pronouncing the words even (ev'u) evun, heaven (heav'n) heavun or heaven, often (of'n) often, &c. Walker remarks with great keenness on this error, declaring it to be a "puerile and false pronunciation." If the writer is correctly informed, it is never heard among good speakers in England. The following are nearly all the words in which the e should be sounded: aspen, chicken, hyphen, kitchen, jerken, latten, lichen, marten, mynchen, paten, patten, platen, rowen, wicken, and yewen. The e is also sounded when preceded by the liquids l, m, n, r, as in woolen, omen, linen, siren, &c., though fallen, stolen, and swollen omit the e in pronunciation. With regard to Eden, bounden, heathen, mitten, sudden, and sloven, there is a diversity of usage among good speakers in this country, some suppressing, and some sounding, the e.

ON with O silent.

§ 59. Many words ending in on preceded by c, ck, s, and t, omit the o in pronunciation, as in reckon (reck'n), bacon (bak'n), treason (treas'u), mutton (mutt'n), &c.

ED with E silent.

§ 60. The termination ed is usually shortened in pronunciation by dropping the sound of the e (as in loved (lov'd), aimed (aim'd), diffused (diffus'd), &c.), unless this letter is preceded by d or t (as in amended, contented, &c.), when its omission is organically impossible. But in adverbs formed by adding ly, and in nouns formed by adding ness to words ending in ed, the e of this termination is uniformly sounded, as in assuredly, confusedly, renewedly, amazedness, composedness, &c. There are also some participial adjectives, and some adjectives not derived from verbs, in which the e is commonly sounded, as, aged, beloved, blessed, crabbed, cragged, crooked, crutched, cursed, cusped, deuced, dogged, hooked, jagged, learned, legged, naked, peaked, picked (sharp), ragged, rugged, stuffed, wicked, winged, wretched. The e is also pronounced in the derivatives formed from such adjectives, as, learnedly, blessedness; but is generally omitted in the compounds, as, full-aged (-ājd), sheath-winged (-wingd). In poetry, the meter often requires us to pronounce ed as a distinct syllable, when it would not be so pronounced in prose. In all cases where it should properly be sounded, its omission is a mark of great vulgarity.

NOTE.—In reading the Scriptures and Prayer-book, some persons, chiefly among the clergy, make it a practice to pronounce the participial termination -ed, in most cases in which it is not preceded by a vowel (as in believed, revealed), as a distinct syllable. Thus, "Whom he did predestinate, them he also call-ed;" and whom he call-ed, them he also justified;" and whom he justified, them he also glorified." This usage was formerly a very prevalent one, but at the present time it is much more limited, and is commonly regarded as savoring of affectation or of an old-school education.

EL with E silent.

§ 61. As a general rule, the e is sounded in these terminations, as in gravel, level, vessel, chapel, &c. To omit the e in such cases, pronouncing level lev'l, chapel chap'l, &c., is generally regarded as a vulgarity. The following are nearly or quite all the words of this kind in which the e is properly omitted; viz., barbel, betel, chattel, drazel, drivel, easel, grovel, hazel, mangel-wurzel, mantel, mispickel, mussel, navel, ousel, ravel, rivel, scovel, shekel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, swingel, swivel, teasel, toggel, towsel, weasel, and, according to a few orthoëpists, model.

CONSONANTS.

B.

§ 62. The sound represented by this letter (which is unmarked) is heard in the words barn, rob, labor, table, &c.

NOTE.—This sound is formed by the compression of vocalized breath, or voice, within the mouth, while the lips are shut and the back nostrils are closed by covering them with the soft palate. When preceded by m, or followed by t, in the same syllable, b is generally silent, as in bomb, climb, tomb, debt, doubt, subtle, &c. Accumb, dithyramb, iamb, succumb, rhomb, rhumb, are said to be exceptions; yet, in this country, the first and the fourth of these words are commonly pronounced without sounding the b. B is also silent in bdellium.

C.

§ 63. C marked thus, Ç, ç, (soft c), has the sound of s, as in cede, trace, acid, cypress, &c.

NOTE.—It takes this sound whenever it occurs before e (even if silent), i, or y.—See S, § 90.

When the letters ce or ci are immediately preceded by an accented syllable, and are followed by a vowel in the next syllable, the c combines in pronunciation with the e or i to form the sound sh, as in ocean, social, saponaceous, &c. In some words, c alone has this sound, or, rather, the e or i is used twice, first combining with the c to represent the sound of sh, and then, in the same syllable, taking on its customary vowel sound, as in so-ci-al'i-ty.—See SH, § 95.

§ 64. C marked thus, Ĉ, ĉ (hard c), has the sound of k when it comes before a, o, u, l, or r, before k, s, or t final, and when it ends a word or a syllable, as in call, cot, cut, clot, crown, black, act, zinc, traffic, picture, flaccid, eth'ics.—See K, § 78.

§ 65. C has the sound of z in the words sacrifice, sice, suffice, and discern, and in their derivatives. It is silent in the words czar, victuals, indict, and their derivatives, and also in the termination scele, as in muscle, corpuscle, &c.

CH.

§ 66. Ch unmarked (English ch) has very nearly the sound of tsh, as in child, much, richer, speechless, &c.

NOTE.—The compound sound signified by this digraph is not precisely equivalent to that represented by tsh. The ordinary sound of t is uttered with the tip of the tongue pressed against the gum of the upper front teeth. The first element of ch is uttered with the upper flat surface of the tongue, near the tip, applied to the gum at a point higher up, just where a relaxation of the contact produces the configuration requisite for sounding sh, the second constituent of the compound. The two elements are so closely blended in pronunciation that, like a diphthong, or compound vowel, they have the effect of only a single sound or beat upon the ear.

When the letter t comes before u (= yoo) in an unaccented syllable, and is at the same time preceded by an accented syllable (as in nature), or when it is preceded by s or x in an accented syllable, and is immediately followed by ia (= ya) or io (= yo) in an unaccented syllable (as in Christian, question, admixtion), both this letter and the y virtually following it are, by some speakers, preserved in their usual and appropriate sounds; thus, nature (nāt'yoor) Christian (krīst'yan), question (kwĕst'yun), admixtion (ad-mīkst'yun), &c. But by others they are suffered to sink into the easier and closely allied sound of ch in church; thus, nature (nā-choor), Christian (krīs'chan), question (kwĕs'chun), admixtion (ad-mīks'chun), &c. In regard to the pronunciation of words ending in teous, when this termination is not under, but is immediately preceded by, the accent (as in boun'teous), usage is far from being uniform, some calling it t-yus (as boun'tyus), others reducing it to chus (as boun'chus), while others corrupt it into che-us (as boun'cheus); but that mode which keeps both the t and the e in their customary sounds (as boun'te-us), is the most common, except in the single word righteous, which is properly pronounced rīt'yus, or rī'chus.

§ 67. Ch marked thus, Ĉh, ĉh (French ch), has the sound of sh, as in chaise, marchioness, machine, &c.—See SH, § 95. Most words of this kind are derived from the French.

§ 68. Ch marked thus, Ĉh, ĉh (Latin ch), has the sound of k, as in chorus, epoch, distich, &c. This is the usual sound in words derived from the ancient languages; but cherub and charity, with their derivatives, are exceptions. Ch is always hard (like k) before l and r, as in chlorine, chrism.

NOTE.—The prefix arch, denoting chief, is pronounced ark in archangel and its derivatives, and in words from foreign languages in which the other component part is not separately current in English, as, architecture, archipelago, architrave, &c. In all other cases, it is pronounced artch, as in arch-bishop, arch-enemy, arch-fiend, &c.

§ 69. Ch is silent in the word drachm (though not in drachma, drak'ma), and also in schism, yacht (yot), and their derivatives.

D.

§ 70. The sound of d (unmarked), as in dale, sad, rider, tradesman, &c.

NOTE.—The sound of this letter is formed by pressing the end of the tongue against the upper gums, and then forcing up vocalized breath, or voice, into the mouth, the soft palate being raised to prevent its escape through the nose.

This is the regular and usual sound of d; but when this letter follows a whispered or non-vocal consonant in the same syllable, it uniformly takes the sound of t, as in hissed (hist). (See § 108.) D is silent only in the words Wednesday and handkerchief.

F.

§ 71. The sound of f (unmarked), as in fame, leaf, definite, softly, &c.

NOTE.—This letter, which is never silent, is uttered by applying the lower lip to the upper front teeth, and emitting the breath. F has only this one sound, except in the single word of, in which it has the power of v. In the compounds hereof, thereof, whereof, many speakers preserve the customary and regular sound of the f; but good usage allows it to be sounded as in the simple word.

G.

§ 72. G marked thus, Ĝ, ĝ (g hard), has the sound of that letter in the word go; as in get, gave, give, begun, keg, sluggish, smuggle, &c.

NOTE.—This sound is produced by a compression of intoned breath, or voice, confined within the mouth by a contact of the root of the tongue with the posterior part of the palate, which is at the same time raised sufficiently to cover the back nostrils, or openings from the pharynx into the nose.

G is hard before a (except in the single word gaol and its derivatives), o, u, k, l, and r, as in gate, gore, gum, ghastly, glad, grain. It is sometimes, though not usually, hard before e, i, and y, as in get, give, gibbous, muggy. This occurs chiefly in words from the Anglo-Saxon, and in a very few from the Greek. It is also, and always, hard at the end of words, and in the derivatives of such words, even when the g is doubled and followed by e, i, or y, as in crag, drug, fog, cragged, druggist, foggy.

When ä, î, or ï, is preceded in the same syllable by the sound of g, or of k, very many speakers, particularly in England, interpose a slight sound of ē, as in card, kind, garden, guard, girl, guile, guise, sky. Some persons affect the introduction of a full and distinct sound of long e, or of consonant y, in such cases; saying kee-ard or k-yard, kee-înd or k-yînd, ske-ÿ or sk-yî, &c. The practice of a very large portion, if not a majority, of the best speakers in the United States, and also of many educated persons in England, is to join the sound of the g or k to that of the ä or î, without suffering any other sound to slip in between them.

§ 73. G marked thus, Ĝ, ĝ (g soft), has the compound sound of j, as in gem, rage, engine, caged, &c.—See § 77.

NOTE. — The letter g generally takes this sound when it comes before e, i, or y; but there are some exceptions. (See the preceding section.) G has also its soft sound before a in the single word gaol (now commonly spelt jail), and in its derivatives and compounds.

§ 74. In a few words from the French, g retains the sound of zh, which it has before e and i in that language, as in rouge (roozh), mirage (mī-rāzh'), &c.

G is silent before m and n final, and also when initial before n, as in phlegm, sign, gnat.

For the office which g performs in such words as longer, stronger, &c., see § 82.

GH.

§ 75. This digraph (which is unmarked) is sounded, at the beginning of a word, like g hard, as in ghastly, ghost, gherkin, &c. It is silent after the vowel i, as in high, sigh, weigh; and it is generally silent before t, as in bought, fraught, taught, &c. The words draught and laughter, where it has the sound of f, are exceptions. In other cases, gh is generally pronounced like f, as in chough, cough, rough, tough, trough, enough, &c.; but it sometimes has the sound of k, as in hough, lough, shough. In the word hiecough, it is usually pronounced like p.

H.

§ 76. This letter (which is unmarked) is a mere aspiration or breathing, and represents no fixed configuration of the vocal organs.

NOTE. — It is an emission of unvoiced breath through whatever position of the mouth-organs is required by the succeeding element, the organs being always placed to form the next following letter before the h is pronounced. Thus, in he the tongue is put in a position to sound the e before the h is uttered; and similarly in hall, hard, home, &c. It differs, however, from a mere whispered vowel, in being an expiration of breath through the open glottis, whereas in whispering a vowel the glottis is almost closed by the approximation of the vocal cords.

In the following words, heir, heiress, herb, herbage, honest, honor, honorable, hour, with their derivatives, and also in hostler (more properly spelt ostler), h is silent. It is also marked as silent by most orthoëpists in hospital, humor, and humble, with their derivatives. There is, however, an increasing tendency to sound the h in these words. H is silent after g initial, as in ghost, gherkin, &c.; after r, as in rhyme, myrrh, &c.; and also when preceded by a vowel in the same syllable, as in ah, eh, oh, buhl, Jehovah, &c. In many parts of England, the sound of this letter is almost always omitted where it ought to be uttered, and uttered where it ought to be omitted; as 'ouse for house, happle for apple, &c. This very gross and vulgar error is rarely, if ever, heard among natives of the United States.

J.

§ 77. This letter (which is unmarked) has very nearly the sound of dzh, being precisely the same as that of g soft, as in jar, jeer, joke, &c. — See § 73.

NOTE. — The sound of j, though almost identical with that of dzh, differs from it as the sound of ch in chin differs from that of tsh. (See § 66, NOTE.) J is never silent. In the word hallelujah, it has the sound of consonant y.

In words in which d precedes a letter having regularly the sound of y, and occurring in an unaccented syllable, as in modulate (mod'u-late), soldier (söld'yer), the sound of j is very often substituted for the combined sounds of the d and y (thus, mōj'oo-late, sōl'jer); — just as the sound of ch is substituted for the combined sounds of t and y, in nature, question, righteous, &c. (See § 66, NOTE.) Smart remarks, "It is possible to preserve the pure sound of the t and d in nature and verdure; yet nothing is more certain than that they are not preserved pure by the best and most careful speakers."

K.

§ 78. This letter (which is unmarked) has one uniform sound, as heard in keep, king, kitchen, &c., and is precisely equivalent to c hard. — See § 64.

NOTE. — The sound represented by this letter differs from that of g in go (hard g) only in being a whispered and not a vocal utterance; the organs are placed in the same position for forming both sounds. Before n, in the same syllable, k is silent, as in knack, knell, knit, know, &c. It is also silent after c, as in back, barrack, &c. In regard to the pronunciation sometimes given to such words as kind, sky, &c., see § 72, NOTE.

L.

NOTE. — This letter has only one sound, which consists of an efflux of vocalized breath, or voice, over the sides of the tongue, while its tip is pressed against the gums of the upper front teeth. L is silent in many words, especially before a final consonant, as in almond, malmsey, palmer, alms, calm, walk, half, could, would, should, &c.

M.

§ 80. The sound of m (unmarked), as heard in make, aim, clamor, armed, &c.

NOTE. — This letter has one uniform sound, produced by closing the lips, and letting the voice issue through the nose. It is silent when it precedes n in the same syllable, as in mnemonics.

N.

§ 81. The sound of n (unmarked), as heard in nail, ten, panel, entry, &c.

NOTE. — In the production of this sound, the tip of the tongue is pressed against the upper gums, as for d; but the voice, instead of being confined within the mouth, is suffered to escape uninterruptedly through the nose, the nasal passages being uncovered for that purpose.

When final after l or m, n is uniformly silent, as in kiln, condemn, solemn, hymn, limn, &c.; but it is generally sounded in the derivatives formed from such words by adding to them a termination beginning with a vowel, as in condemnatory, solemnize, hymnic, limner, &c. In the present participles of verbs ending in mn, as contemn, hymn, &c., the n, though often unpronounced, is more properly sounded, as, contemning, hymning, &c.

§ 82. The sound of n as heard in linger, link, uncle, &c. (marked N, n).

NOTE. — This is essentially the same sound as that represented by ng; but its length varies greatly according as it is followed by a whispered or a vocal consonant. When it is followed in the same syllable by the sound of k, as in link, it is cut so short by the instantaneous and perfect closure of the organs which form this pure mute as to add almost nothing to the length of the syllable. It is therefore undesirable to respell words ending in nk by the use of ng; and, in this volume, this is not done, a diacritical mark being placed below the n instead, as a sufficient indication of the true quality and quantity of the sound. But when this sound of n is followed by that of g in a separate syllable, as in the primitive words anger, finger, conger, hunger, it is long and sonorous, and increases the duration of the syllabic utterance very perceptibly. As a general rule, the change of n into n̄ takes place only before g and k (or before the equivalents of k, namely, c, q, and x = ks). It takes place before k or its equivalents when any one of these letters follows n in the same syllable, as in link, cinque, minx, bethink', adunquē', phar'yinx; and before g or k, or an equivalent of k, when any one of these letters begins an unaccented syllable and the n ends a preceding accented one, as in con'cord, con'gress, un'cle, &c. Pen'guin and a few other words are exceptions; also words beginning with the prefixes in, non, quinque, and un; as, in'come, non'conform'ity, quin'quevalve, un'compound'ed, &c. It is to be observed that, if the n ends an unaccented syllable, and the g or k begins an accented one, the n invariably retains its regular sound: as in con-cord'ant, con-gres'sional, &c.

It is also to be observed that in most derivative words, like hanger, singer, wronger (from hang, sing, and wrong), the g is not sounded, but unites with the n to represent the sound which in the primitives just cited is represented by n alone. But in the comparative and superlative degrees of the three following words, viz., long, strong, and young, and also in the words diphthongal and triphthongal (from diphthong and triphthong), the g is always, though very irregularly, pronounced, taking its hard sound, as in go; thus, lon'ger, stron'ger, &c. It is further to be observed that there is a small class of words in which the n has its ordinary sound, as in nail, and the z its soft sound, as in gem. Of this class, the words danger, stranger, gin-ger, and plunger are examples.

§ 83. The sound of ng (unmarked), as in sing, singer, singly, &c.

NOTE. — This is a simple, elementary sound, and is not (as might be supposed) a compound sound made up of the sound of n in conjunction with that of g. In forming ng, the tongue is placed in the same position as for forming g; the nostrils, however, are not completely closed, but yet so much so as to produce a marked resonance (somewhat similar to the sound of n), which may be continued to any length, as in sing, bring, &c. — See § 82.

P.

§ 84. The sound of p (unmarked), as heard in pay, ape, paper, apily, &c.

NOTE. — The position of the organs necessary for forming this sound is the same as for b, but the sound itself differs from that of b in being an utterance of the breath instead of the voice.

P has but one sound: it is silent when initial before n, s, and t, as in pneumatics, psalm, pshaw, ptarmigan. It is also silent or very indistinct when it occurs between m and t in the same syllable, as in tempt, exempt, &c.; but when preceded by m in the same syllable and followed by t or by k in the next syllable, it is more properly sounded; as in temp-tation, exemp-tion, redemp-tion, consump-tive, sump-tuous, bump-kin, pump-kin, &c., though, in colloquial utterance, it is very often suppressed in words of this class. It is also mute in the following words, and in their derivatives: viz., raspberry, receipt, sempstress, accomp-t, and corps.

PH.

§ 85. This digraph (which is unmarked) occurs chiefly in words of Greek derivation, and has usually the sound of f, as in phantom, sylph, philosophy, &c. In Stephen it has the sound of v; and, according to most orthoëpists, it has the same sound in nephew (nev'ew), though in this country it has commonly its regular sound of f in that word.

Before th initial, ph is silent, as in phthisis; it is also silent in apophthegm. In diphthong, triphthong, ophthalmy, naphtha, and other allied words, together with their derivatives, the ph is often sounded as p, or the h may be regarded as silent.

Q.

§ 86. Q is followed in all cases by u, and these two letters, taken together, have usually the sound of kw, as in queen (kween), conquest (konk'west), &c. In a few words derived from the French, qu is sounded like k, as in coquette, quadrille, &c. It has the same sound in the common termination que, as in antique, oblique, burlesque, &c.

R.

§ 87. This letter (which is unmarked) may be viewed under three aspects:—

(1.) R as in rip, trip, carol, &c. (sometimes called rough, trilled, dental, or initial r).

In forming this sound, the tongue assumes nearly the same position as for d; but the voice, instead of being confined within the mouth, is suffered to flow freely over the tip of the tongue, producing a very slightly trilled and peculiarly liquid sound, closely resembling that of z in the mode of its formation, but not partaking of its harsh, buzzing quality; the difference between the two sounds, in this respect, resulting from the fact that the tip of the tongue is approximated more closely to the upper gum for z than for r. R is sometimes strongly trilled or rolled by a forcible expulsion of the voice; but in customary speech, it is very gently pronounced, and any marked vibration of the tongue should be carefully avoided as a pedantic affectation. The sound here described is heard in English in the two following cases: 1. When r is not preceded by a vowel, as in ream, dream, prompt, spring; 2. When it stands between two vowels of which the first is short, as in baron, merit, spirit, florid. Often the r is doubled in the written word, as in barren, merry, torrid; but, in these cases, only one r is heard in the pronunciation, providing the preceding vowel is short. — See § 109.

(2.) R as in far, form, terse, surge, &c. (sometimes called smooth, palatal, guttural, obscure, or final r).

By most orthoëpists at the present day, the letter r, when it occurs before any consonant, or when final, is regarded as a distinct element from the last, and as formed by a slight vibration of the back part, or root, of the tongue against the extremity of the soft palate. Many writers, however, do not admit any such distinction in the sound of r, maintaining that the value of the letter (apart from the obscure vowel element described in No. 3) is uniform in all situations.

(3.) R, connected with a guttural vowel sound, as heard in such words as fare, mere, ire, ore, cure, poor, pure, &c. Here the character r represents two sounds: viz., an obscure vowel sound resembling that of u in urge, and a smooth or palatal r, so that the above words are pronounced fāur (see § 4), mēur, īur, &c.

§ 88. In the pronunciation of accurate speakers, r is never silent; but when it occurs after a long vowel or a diphthong in the same syllable, as in here, fur, murmur, our, mire, &c., it is commonly and entirely suppressed, both in the United States and the south of England. In the northern counties of England, and in Scotland and Ireland, with equal impropriety, it is, when so situated, always trilled.

§ 89. In English usage, when the letter r is preceded in an accented syllable by a long vowel or a diphthong, and is followed by a vowel in the next syllable, it uniformly represents both the palatal, or smooth, and the dental, or trilled, sound of this letter, as in hero, iris, glory, lurid, pronounced hēr'ro, īr'ris, glōr'ry, lūr'rid. In the United States, this double power of the letter r is chiefly, though not invariably, restricted to the derivatives of words ending in r or re preceded by a long vowel or a diphthong, as in poorer (poor'rer), from poor; boring (bōr'ring), from bore; airy (ār'ry), from air; peerage (peer'rage), from peer, wiry (wīr'ry), from wire; securing (secūr'ring), from secure; but, on the other hand, we say he'ro, ī'ris, glō'ry, lū'rid, &c., because these words are not derived from any other words in the language. In Scotland, however, the universal practice is to join the r in all cases to the following vowel; or, in other words, to give it only its dental or trilled sound; thus, peer'rage and he'ro, wī'ry and ī'ris, bō'ring and glō'ry, secū'ring and lū'rid, &c.

It is to be observed that those orthoëpists who maintain that r has one invariable sound, assert that the only peculiarity in the English pronunciation of such words as hero, iris, &c., and in the English and American pronunciation of such words as poorer, boring, &c., consists in the interposition between the r and the preceding vowel of an obscure vowel sound like that of u in urge, which obscure sound is omitted by the Scotch.

S.

§ 90. S unmarked has its regular sharp or hissing sound, as in same, yes, massy, resting, &c.

NOTE. — This sound is an utterance of unvocal breath forced between the tip of the tongue and the upper gum, the tongue being placed in the proper position for sounding t and d. S always has this sound at the beginning, and frequently in the middle and at the end, of words. — See § 108.

§ 91. S, when marked thus, S, s, has the buzzing sound of z in zeal, as in has, amuse, rosy, &c. — See § 108.

NOTE. — There has been much diversity among orthoëpists as to the sound of s in words commencing in dis, as disarm, disburse, &c. Walker laid down this rule:—“It [s] ought always to be pronounced like z when unaccented and followed by an accented flat mute [b, d, g hard, v], a liquid [l, m, n, r], or a vowel.' Heuce he gave pronunciations like the following: disbud, dizbud; disedify, dizedify; disjoin, dizjoin; dislike, dizlike; dislodge, dizlodge, &c. Scarcely any subsequent orthoëpist has gone so far. Webster's Dictionary gives s the sound of z in the following words only: viz., disarm, disaster, discern, disease, disheir, dishonest, dishonor, dismal, disown, dissolve.

There are a few verbs ending in se, which are also used as nouns or adjectives. To distinguish between them, the s is vocalized in the verb, and whispered in the noun or adjective; as close, a., and close, v.; house, n., and house, v.; use, n., and use, v.; diffuse, a., and diffuse, v.

§ 92. When the letter s, having regularly its sharp or hissing sound, follows a liquid or another s, and precedes a letter having the sound of consonant y, as i in reversion, mansion, passion, and, in a few cases, when it precedes ū (=yoo), as in sure, sugar, censure, sensual, the sounds represented by these letters are exchanged for that of the simple but very similar element represented by sh. Thus the examples just given are actually pronounced re-ver'shun, man'shun, pash'un, shoor, shoog'ar, cen'shoor, sen'shoo-al, though the theoretical pronunciation would be re-vers'yun, mans'yun, päss'yun, s-yoor, s-yoog'ar, cens'yoor, sens'yooal.

In a few words, s alone takes the sound of sh, as in nau-sea, Asiatic; or rather the e or i, in such cases, does double duty, uniting with the s to signify the sound of sh, and at the same time retaining its usual vowel character.

§ 93. When s is preceded by a vowel in an accented syllable, and is followed by a vowel having regularly or theoretically the sound of consonant y, these two letters are commonly pronounced like zh, as in adhesion, revision, explosion, confusion, pleasure, visual, usury, &c. (See § 107.) So also in scission, abscission, rescission, though the s is not preceded by a vowel in the accented syllable.

§ 94. S is silent in the words aisle, isle, island, demesne, puisne, viscount, and generally at the end of French words adopted into English, as chamois, corps, vis-a-vis, &c.

Sh.

§ 95. This digraph (which is unmarked) represents the simple sound heard in shelf, flesh, usher, &c.

NOTE. — This element is formed by a partial contact of the upper surface of the tongue, near the tip, with that side of the arch or dome of the palate which is just above the gums of the front teeth, and by an effusion of unvoiced breath through the narrow aperture left for its escape. Organically considered, the sound is intermediate between those of s and consonant y; genetically considered, it has been evolved from the combination of these two sounds, which, in rapid utterance, do not easily maintain their distinct character. Thus, if we pronounce the word special in three syllables, speç'i-al, and then try to reduce it to two, we shall find that it is difficult to articulate the c (= s) and the i (= y) by one continuous effort of the organs, and that the intermediate sh is naturally substituted as an easier and a closely allied sound. So with version, mission, sure, &c. In motion, and other words ending in tion not preceded by s or by x, we may suppose the t to have been originally sounded like s, as in words of the same class in French; or the process of development may have been, first, mo'ti-on (with the t kept pure); then mõt'yun; next mõt'shun or mo'chun (see § 66); and finally, by sinking the t, mo'shun.

Sh is never silent. It is expressed: 1. By c, as in oceanic, e-ma-ci-a'tion; 2. By s, as in nau'se-ate, A-si-at'ic; 3. By t, as in ne-go-ti-a'tion; 4. By ce, as in o'cean; 5. By ci, as in so'cial; 6. By se, as in nau'se-ous; 7. By si, as in ten'sion; 8. By ti, as in cap'tious; 9. By the si implied in xi (=ksi), as in noxi-ous; 10. By the sy implied in su (=syoo), as in men-su-ra'tion (men-shoo-ra'shun); 11. By the sy implied in xu (=ksyoo), as in lux'u-ry (luk'shoo-ry); 12. By ch, as in chaise, char'la-tan, ma-chine'; 13. By chs, as in fu'chsi-a; 14. By sc, as in con-sci-en'tious; 15. By sch, as in scholr; 16. By sci, as in con'science. — See §§ 63, 92, 97, 104.

In some words, particularly those ending in ciate and tiate, some orthoëpists and speakers pronounce the vowel distinctly after the c or t sounded as sh; as, enunciate (e-nūn'shī-ate), expatiate (eks-pā'shī-ate), &c.; others pronounce it with a slight sound, as of a very brief or half-suppressed e, represented in the Dictionaries of Smart and Cooley by an apostrophe, thus, enunciate (e-nūn'sh'ate), expatiate (eks-pā'sh'ate), &c.; others, again, as Sheridan, Perry, and Dr. Webster, considering it an error to use the vowel twice, pronounce these terminations, and others like them, in one syllable; as, enunciate (e-nūn'shate), expatiate (eks-pā'shate), &c. In this Dictionary, however, these terminations are given in two syllables (-shī-ate), in accordance with what is believed to be the best and most general usage; but a reference to the present section is generally appended to words of this class, that the inquirer may not be left in ignorance of the fact that there is a want of uniformity in their pronunciation.

T.

§ 96. The sound of t (unmarked) as heard in tone, note, noted, assets, &c.

NOTE. — This sound differs from that of d (see § 70) only in being a whispered and not a vocal utterance; that is to say, the position or configuration of the articulating organs is the same in both cases, but for d the breath, confined within the mouth by a close contact of the fore part of the tongue with the upper gum, is vocalized and rendered audible in a sort of murmur heard before the organs separate, while for t it is kept pure or unvoiced, and cannot therefore be heard until the contact is forcibly broken.

T is silent in the terminations ten and tle after s, as in fasten, listen, often, castle, gristle, throstle, &c. It is also silent in the words chestnut, Christmas, hostler or ostler, mistletoe, and mortgage.

§ 97. When t precedes any one of the diphthongs ia, ie, and io, and, at the same time, follows an accented syllable not ending in s or x, it assumes, in some words, the sound of sh, as in negotiation; but, in most cases, the compound sound resulting from the coalescence of t and i is exchanged for that of sh, as in patient, station, partial, &c. When s or x precedes the t, this letter and the i following it either preserve their own sounds pure, or exchange them for the sound of ch in chin, as in question (kwes'tyun or kwes'-chun), mixtion (mikst'yun or miks'chun), &c. — See § 66, NOTE, and § 95.

Th.

§ 98. Th unmarked has its sharp or whispered sound, as in thing, breath, author, athlete, &c.

NOTE. — This is the sound made in lisping. It is produced by putting the point of the tongue between the teeth, or by placing it against the back of the upper front teeth, and forcing out unintonated breath.

Th has this sound generally at the beginning and at the end of words; but there are some exceptions.

§ 99. Th marked thus, Th, th, has its soft, flat, or vocal sound, as in thine, then, with, mother, writhed, &c.

NOTE. — This sound differs from the foregoing only in being an utterance of voice instead of simple breath. It occurs chiefly between two vowels in words purely English, as in leather, wither, heathen; also at the end of the verbs mouth, bequeath, and smooth; and when followed by a final e mute, as in breathe, clothe, &c.

Nouns which, in the singular, end in th sharp, usually preserve the same sound in the plural, as death, deaths; sabbath, sabbaths, &c.; but in the plurals of the following seven words the th is vocal; viz., bath, cloth, lath, mouth, oath, path, and wreath, as, baths, cloths, laths, paths, &c. Some pronounce truths, in the plural, with the vocal sound (truths), but this is sanctioned by no orthoëpist.

Although th in with has its vocal sound, yet in the compounds herewith, therewith, and wherewith, it is, according to the orthoëpists, pronounced with its sharp or whispered sound. Good usage, however, allows it to retain in the compound the same sound that it has in the simple word.

§ 100. Th has the sound of t in phthisic (tiz'ik), thyme (tīm), and their derivatives; and also in the proper names Thomas (tom'as) and Thames (temz). This is also its sound in all modern European languages except the Greek. In asthma and isthmus, it is said by the orthoëpists to have the same sound; but the great majority of speakers, in the United States at least, entirely suppress the th, pronouncing the former word ăz'mă or ăs'mă, and the latter is'mus or iz'mus. — See § 108.

V.

§ 101. The sound of v (unmarked), as in vane, leave, evil, &c.

NOTE. — This sound differs from that of f only in being an utterance of the voice instead of the breath, the organs assuming precisely the same position for both sounds.

V is never silent, except in sevensnight (sen'nit), which is also written sennight, and, according to some orthoëpists, in the word twelvemonth, colloquially pronounced twel'munth.

W.

§ 102. At the beginning of a word or of a syllable, as wet, worse, inward, this letter (which is unmarked) is a consonant, formed from, and nearly resembling, the vowel  $\bar{o}$ , but requiring for its utterance a closer position, or greater contraction, of the labial aperture; and this compression of the lips changes the quality of the sound, giving it a buzzing and articulative, instead of a smooth and purely vocal, character.

NOTE. — Some writers, however, maintain that the sound is merely that of a brief oo; in other words, that it is no consonant at all; but a simple experiment will serve to show the incorrectness of this view. If w is the same as oo, the word wōd must be equivalent to oo pronounced twice in succession; but ōd-ōd' is evidently a word of two syllables, and wōd, as universally pronounced, is confessedly a monosyllable. Another consideration will help to establish the consonantal nature of w. Like the other consonants, it is capable of stopping or shutting a vowel, that is, of causing it to assume its regular short sound, as in the cockney pronunciation of very as vē'wy, of marry as mā'wy, of horrid as hō'wid, &c.

After a vowel in the same syllable, w is generally silent, as in glōw, thrōwn, &c.; though sometimes significant, as in flaw. With e it unites to form a diphthong, which is generally sounded like long u, as in dew, few, new; but it is sounded like ōd, or like u in rude, if the letter r stands before it, as in crew, shrew, &c. It is often joined with a preceding o to represent the diphthongal sound otherwise expressed by ou, as in brow, cow, town, &c. — See § 39.

W is always silent before r in the same syllable, as in wring (ring), wrote (rōt), awry (a-rī'); also in the words answer (an'ser), sword (sōrd), toward (to'ard), two (too).

It is often represented by u occurring before another vowel in the same syllable, as quail, query, languid, asuage, &c.

Wh.

§ 103. The true sound of these letters is in the reverse order, viz., hw, as they were written by the Anglo-Saxons; e. g., whet is pronounced hwet. The h is here a free emission of breath through the position taken by the lips in the formation of w, the vocal cords being all the while completely relaxed. (See § 76.) Many recent phonologists, however, contend that the combination wh represents a simple whisper of the ordinary w, to which it stands in the same relation as any surd consonant does to its corresponding sonant. Those who hold this opinion not only wrongly apprehend and describe their own pronunciation, but they overlook the fact, that, as a closer approximation of the lips in pronouncing oo-et changes the sound to wet, so hoo-et in like manner gives rise to whet; and they forget that all words of this class originally began with an aspiration or a guttural, as their etymological history clearly shows. Thus what is from the A.-S. hwæt, O. Sax. huat, Icel. hvater, &c. Compare also Scot. quhile and English while, Lat. quid and English what. In who, whole, whoop, whore, and their derivatives, the w is silent.

X.

§ 104. This letter has two sounds; viz., its regular sharp sound (unmarked) like ks, as in expect, tax, &c., and its soft or flat sound (marked  $\underline{x}$ ,  $\underline{x}$ ) like gz, as in exist, example, &c.

NOTE. — This latter sound usually occurs when the syllable which immediately follows the x begins with an accented vowel, as in auxiliary, exert, exalt, luxurious, and sometimes also in the derivatives of such words, even though the x is under the accent, as in exemplary, exhalation, &c.

In anxious, noxious, luxury, and a few other words, the s which is the second element of the x, and the following i or the first element of the following u, instead of retaining their usual sound of y, are generally exchanged for the sound of sh; thus, ank'shus, nok'shus, luk'shoo-ry, &c.

At the beginning of words, x has the sound of z, as in xanthic (zan'-), xebec (ze'-), xylography (zī-), &c.

Y.

§ 105. The sound of y (unmarked), as in yawn, year, young, beyond, &c.

NOTE. — This sound — which is heard in English only at the beginning of a word or a syllable — is formed from the vowel e by a closer approximation of the tongue to the roof of the mouth, which destroys the pure vocality of the e. As w is often confounded with oo, so y is often confounded with  $\bar{e}$ ; but it may be proved to be a distinct sound by an experiment on the word ye similar to that by which w was shown to be distinct from oo. — See § 102.

In the middle or at the end of a syllable, y is a vowel, and has precisely the sound that i would have in the same situation. — See §§ 15, 16, 35, 48, 54, &c.

Y is often represented by i, when this letter occurs in an unaccented syllable before another vowel, and, at the same time, follows an accented syllable, as in familiar, minion, poniard, &c.

Z.

§ 106. The regular and leading sound of this letter (which is unmarked) is heard in zone, maze, hazy, frozen, &c. It is the vocal or sonant form of s. (See § 90.) In a few words it takes the sound of zh, as in seizure (sē'zhoor) &c. (See § 107.) In rendezvous it is silent.

Zh.

§ 107. This sound is the vocal correspondent of sh, and is uttered with the organs in precisely the same position.

NOTE. — It has arisen, in all English words, from an attempt to pronounce the sound of z in maze (see § 106) and that of consonant y (see § 105) in immediate succession. On account of the vicinity of the contacts represented by zh and y, the effort to do this causes the tongue to assume the position requisite for sounding zh, or nearly so; and hence zh was naturally substituted as being a very similar sound of easier utterance. Thus, fusion may be supposed to have been originally pronounced fūz'yun, and then fu'zhun; grazier, first grāz'yer, and then grāzh'er. — See § 95.

The combination zh is used in works on pronunciation to indicate the sound here described, on account of the relationship of this sound to that commonly expressed by the digraph sh. But the two letters zh never come together in the proper orthography of any English word. The sound for which they stand is represented by zi (when the z occurs in, or is immediately preceded by, an accented syllable, and the i is followed by another vowel and occurs in an unaccented syllable, as in glazier); by the zy implied in zu (= zyoo), as in azure; by s in symposium, &c.; by si in certain situations (see § 93); by ti in the single word transit, as sometimes pronounced; and by g in one or two words adopted from the French, as rouge.

ASSIMILATION OF CONSONANTS.

§ 108. When a whispered and a vocal consonant come together in the same syllable, it is generally very difficult, in fluent pronunciation, to preserve each in its regular and appropriate sound. Hence it frequently becomes necessary to change the character of the one or of the other, in order to make the combination readily pronounceable. This is generally done, in English, by assimilating the sound of the second consonant, whether whispered or vocal, to that of the first. Thus, in chintz, the vocal consonant z assumes the sound of its whispered correspondent t, in order to unite with the whispered t. On the other hand, the s in winds is vocalized, or assumes the sound of z, for the sake of corresponding with the vocal d. Sometimes, though rarely, the sound of the first consonant is assimilated to that of the second, as in spasm (spazm).

This affinity between these two classes of consonants is an important fact, and one which needs to be familiarly known. For there are four very common inflectional terminations which invariably come under its influence, viz. : 1. Possessive forms in s, as maid's (maidz); 2. Plurals in s, as tubs (tubz), groves (grōvz); 3. S in the third person singular of verbs, as loads (loadz), smooths (smoothz); 4. Preterits and participles in d preceded by e mute, as in dashed (dasht), ingulfed (ingulft).

It is necessary to observe, that there are a few words ending in dth, as breadth, hundredth, &c., where the aspirate th is not assimilated to the vocal d; and also that, after ng, and the liquids l, m, n, r, — all of which are vocal consonants, — a whispered consonant can be pronounced without difficulty, and actually is pronounced, as in melt, terse, tempt (temt), fence, strength, &c.

DUPLICATION OF CONSONANTS.

§ 109. In many words, a consonant is doubled between two vowels; yet, in such cases, no more than one articulation is ever used in speaking. In banner, for example, we close the organs but once between the first and second syllables; nor is it possible to use both of the letters n without pronouncing ban, then intermitting the voice entirely, opening the organs, and closing them a second time. Hence, in all cases, when the same consonant is written twice between vowels, as in banner, robbing, madden, letter, horrid, one of them only is represented by an articulation of the organs; and the only reason for repeating the consonant is to indicate the fact that the preceding vowel has its short sound.

But, although only one articulation is ever used, or, in fluent speech, possibly can be used, where a consonant is written twice, yet in some words the articulation is dwelt upon for an appreciable space of time, producing an apparent duplication of the sound. This effect takes place in many derived words in which the primitive ends or begins with the same letter as that with which a superadded suffix or prefix of English origin respectively begins or ends, as in soulless, fouly, keenness, misstep, outravel, unnatural. The same effect takes place in most compound words, in which the second part begins with the same sound as that with which the first part ends, as in post-town, head-dress, half-filled. — See § 127.

ACCENT.

§ 110. Accent is a particular stress or effort of voice upon certain syllables of words, which distinguishes them from the others by a greater distinctness and loudness of pronunciation. Accent is of two kinds, primary, as in intend', where the full force of the voice is on the last syllable, and secondary, as in su'per-in-tend', where the first syllable is distinguished by a stress greater than that laid on the second and third syllables, though less than that laid on the last. In some words there are two secondary or subordinate accents, as in in-com'pre-hen'si-bil'i-ty.

NOTE. — (1.) The general tendency of accent, whether primary or secondary, is to shorten all vowels but u, when further back than the penultimate syllable, as in ten'ement, ne'cessariness, an'atomical, person'ification, &c.; but we say lū'bricate, and not lūb'ricate; trū'culency, and not trūc'ulency; sū'perabun'dant, and not sūp'erabun'dant, &c. This tendency generally fails, if the accented syllable is followed by two unaccented vowels, as in pe'ri-od, ma'ni-ac; or by two vowels of which the former only is unaccented, as in de'vi-a'tion, o'ri-ent'al.

(2.) The primary and secondary accents are, in certain cases, so nearly equal that we interchange them freely, "making," as Walker remarks, "the secondary principal and the principal secondary." He specifies violin, referee, privateer, artisan, courtesan, charlatan, and might have added ambuscade, cavalcade, caricature, etiquette, reverie, confidante, gouvernante, invalid, n., parachute, and others. Nearly all of these, except the first three, have now (according to able orthoëpists) transferred the primary accent from the last to the first syllable, as in artisan, &c., under the operation of a principle which is stated in § 117.

(3.) Many in this country give a marked secondary accent in certain words which properly have but one accent, and that on a pre-antepenultimate syllable, as in ter'ri-tō'ry, dif'fi-cūl'ty, cir'cum-stān'ces, in'ter-ēst'ing, &c. This droning fault may be corrected by giving the accented syllable a sharp percussive, which carries the voice lightly through the rest of the word. It is also a vulgar American custom, in many words having an unaccented initial syllable followed by an accented one, to lay a nearly equal stress of voice on both, as in ēx'act'ly, gī'gan'tic, v'tal'ic, pō'lit'ical, prē'cise'ly, sāl'va'tion, stū'pen'dous.

DIVIDED USAGE.

§ 111. In quite a large number of words, there is a diversity of practice among good speakers as to the place of the primary accent. This arises mainly from a conflict between certain great principles which affect the seat of the accent. A few of these will now be mentioned, with a view to account for this diversity. It is all that can be done in a brief sketch like this.

§ 112. FIRST PRINCIPLE. — Derivatives take for a time, if not permanently, the accent of the original words from which they are formed, as resolve', from resol'vo, aspect' (Shakespeare, Milton), from aspectus, Hindostan'ee, from Hindostan', &c. So also words derived from other English words by adding one or more syllables to their beginning or end, as within', from in, improp'ler, from prop'ler, po'et-ess, from po'et, pleas'antly, from pleas'ant, ser'viceable, from ser'vice, re-adjust'ment, from adjust', &c.

§ 113. SECOND PRINCIPLE. — Ease of utterance has some influence in deciding the place of the accent. Ac'ceptable, reç'eptacle, and u'tensil, fashionable in the days of Walker, have now taken the easier accentuation of accept'able, recept'acle, and uten'sil. Dis'crepant and dis'crepancy are marked discrep'ant and discrep'ancy by Richardson, Boag, Craig, Wright, Clarke, and others. Subal'tern (instead of Walker's sub'altern) is the accentuation of Richardson, Knowles, Barclay, Craig, Clarke, and many more. Dys-pep'sy has taken the place of dyspepsy in the marking of Webster, Smart, Cull, Wright, Clarke, Cooley, &c., and is now the prevailing accentuation. On the same ground, ances'tral is preferred to an'cestral by Jameson, Webster, Boag, Clarke, and Cull, in conformity with campest'ral and other similar words. Confes'sor, like profes'sor, has superseded confessor in this country, and has the support of Perry, Ash, Rees, Barclay, Boag, Clarke, Cull, Webster, and Worcester. Rem'ediless, from the difficulty of the sound, has been changed in this country into remed'iless, as sanctioned by Perry, Ash, Rees, Fulton and Knight, and Webster. Con'sistory has given way to consist'ory in the marking of Knowles, Barclay, Reid, Brande, Craig, Boag, Clarke, Cooley, and others. In like manner, ac'cessary and ac'cessory (as marked in most English Dictionaries) are commonly pronounced in this country acces'sary and acces'sory, as recommended by Bailey and Ash. These may serve as instances of the application of this principle. It is an important one in its place; and, though it may give rise for a time to a diversity of pronunciation (since some will cling to that which is older and harder), changes of this kind, which promote ease of utterance, will finally prevail.

DISSYLLABLES.

§ 114. THIRD PRINCIPLE. — In words of two syllables, there is a tendency (though with numerous exceptions) to accent the former or penultimate syllable, as in a'gue, bar'on, com'mon, dis'cord, &c.

NOTE. — (1.) This tendency meets with a powerful counteraction in Principle No. 1, viz., that of derivatives retaining the accent of their primitives, as in amuse', deter', offend', &c. It is natural, in such formatives, to place the accent on the radical part of the word; and hence some hundreds of our dissyllables, especially verbs and adverbs, have their accent on the last syllable.

(2.) Still, there is a constant struggle (especially among the common people, who are unacquainted with the derivation of words) to draw back the accent to the first syllable. Here arises another conflict, which produces a diversity of accent; and the common people, being a majority, are, on the whole, slowly gaining upon those who are tenacious of Principle No. 1. Hence con'nate and in'nate (instead of connate' and innate') are generally prevalent in this country, and are now sanctioned by Reid, Boag, Craig, and others. Al'cove (for alcove') is more common among us, and it is so marked by recent English orthoëpists, Boag, Craig, Cull, and others. Con'tents (for contents') has become the general usage of this country, as sanctioned by Cull, Clarke, Webster, and Worcester. Ret'tail (for retail') is now the marking of a majority of the orthoëpists. De'tail (for detail') is less prevalent, but is sanctioned by Smart, Clarke, Cull, Cooley, &c. Pro'lix and pre'text (for prolix' and pretext') are widely prevalent (especially the former), and are authorized by some recent lexicographers. Bom'bast (for bombast') is the accentuation of Walker, Barclay, Richardson, Cull, and Webster; it is admitted by Worcester, and is extensively used in this country. Bu'reau (for bureau') was admitted by Dr. Webster, and is very generally applied to the article of furniture, while bureau' is sometimes used in reference to a department of the government. Ac'cess (for access') is authorized by a number of orthoëpists, and especially, among the later ones, by Knowles, Boag, Wright, Clarke, and Cull.

(3.) No orthoëpist has given any sanction, it is believed, to ro'mance and fi'nance (for romance' and finance'), or to re'search and re'source (for research' and resource'), though these pronunciations are not infrequently heard in America. The two last ought especially to be discountenanced; for search and source are English words, and should therefore remain (as they were from the first) the chief objects of thought.

§ 115. We have about eighty cases among our dissyllables in which the same word is used for a verb on the one hand, and a noun or an adjective on the other. To distinguish between them, we accent the nouns and the adjectives on the first syllable, and the verbs on the last, as, a con'vert, to con'vert'; a con'tract, to con'tract', &c. It is unnecessary to give the list in full, since the accent of nearly all these words has been long settled by general usage.

NOTE. — There are a few cases of divided use in nouns, which will sooner or later be made to conform to the general rule. For example, usage will probably soon fix permanently on per'fect for the adjective, and perfect' for the verb; per'mit for the noun, and permit' for the verb; pro'test for the noun, and protest' for the verb; per'fume for the noun, and perfume' for the verb; pro'ceeds for the noun, and proceed' for the verb; de'tail for the noun, and detail' for the verb; in'crease for the noun, and increase' for the verb; re'tail for the noun, and retail' for the verb; sur'vey for the noun, and survey' for the verb.

There is a tendency among many to accent the first syllable of the noun ally, allies; and, although without sanction as yet from a single orthoëpist, it would not be surprising if this tendency should prevail on the ground stated above, making the noun al'ly, al'lies, and the verb ally'. The noun cement has been extensively pronounced cem'ent, as distinguished from the verb to cement'; but Smart thinks this will not finally prevail; and the tendency does certainly now seem to be toward cement' for the noun as well as the verb.

§ 116. We have a few dissyllables which are at once nouns and adjectives. These are distinguished by accenting the nouns on the first syllable, and the adjectives on the last.

NOUNS.	ADJECTIVES.
Au'gust, the month.	August', noble.
Com'pact, an engagement.	Compact', close.
Ex'ile, banishment.	Exile', small, slender.
In'stinct, an impulse.	Instinct', animated.
Min'ute, of time.	Minute', very small.
Su'pine, in grammar.	Supine', indolent.

The word gallant departs from the above rule. When it denotes a suitor, or "attentive to ladies," it is accented gallant', and is changed into gal'lant when it means high-spirited or daring.

TRISYLLABLES AND POLYSYLLABLES.

§ 117. FOURTH PRINCIPLE. — In words of three or more syllables, there is a strong tendency to accent the antepenult, or third syllable from the end, as in el'oquent, ac'ci-dent, oppor'tunity.

NOTE. — This tendency is counteracted by that of derivation (Principle No. 1. See § 112); and here arises another "conflict," which, to some extent, arrays our scholars on the one side, and the body of the people on the other. Many scholars, for example, are strongly inclined to say con'tem'plate, demon'strate, confis'cate, obdu'rate, &c. (forgetting that they come from participles, contem'platus, demon'stratus, &c.), because by Latin rules their second syllable is long; while the mass of the people, who know nothing of Latin, and are governed by English analogies, are equally bent on saying con'tem'plate, dem'on'strate, ob'du'rate, &c. The latter pronunciation is now very extensively heard, and thus we have a "divided usage" in respect to these and similar words. There is a class of botanical and mineralogical terms ending in phyllous and phyllite (from Gr. φύλλον, a leaf), as quadri'phyllous, antho'phyllite, &c., in which the same struggle is going on. Words having these terminations are differently accented by different authorities, and sometimes even by the same authority. Knowles, Gray, and Worcester are the only authorities who are self-consistent in their pronunciation of such words — Knowles accenting them all on the antepenult, Gray as uniformly on the penult, and Worcester giving an alternative in every case, the penultimate accentuation being his preference. There can be no doubt that that mode of pronunciation which places the accent on the antepenult is most in accordance with the genius of our language; and, in all probability, it will ultimately prevail over the learning or the pedantry of those who contend for the penultimate accentuation. In like manner, bal'cony (for balco'ny) has now, according to Smart, become the true English pronunciation, and is so marked by Knowles, Webster, Cull, Wright, Cooley, and many more.

Ele'giac (for elegi'ac) is the general pronunciation of this country (in accordance with maniac and most other words in -iac), and has the sanction of Perry, Knowles, Wright, Clarke, Cull, Cooley, and Webster. Quan'dary (for quand'ary), in accordance with boundary and nearly every other word of three syllables in -ary, is our prevailing pronunciation, and is sanctioned by Maunder, Cull, Craig, Clarke, Cooley, Worcester, and Webster. Many are disposed to reduce vaga'ry to the same accentuation (va'gary).

§ 118. It is a just principle, laid down by Walker, that "when words come to us whole from the Greek or Latin, the same accent ought to be preserved as in the original." Hence the following words ought to be accented as here marked: viz., Abdo'men, hori'zon, deco'rums, diplo'ma, muse'um, sono'rous, acu'men, bitu'men, and, on like grounds, farra'go, and others. Yet the strong tendency of our language to accent the antepenultimate in all words of three or more syllables has caused this principle to be violated in some cases, as in am'azon, cic'atrix, min'ister, or'ator, pleth'ora, &c.

§ 119. Words of more than two syllables having the same orthography are generally distinguished by a difference of accent, as at'tribute, n., and attrib'ute, v., miscon'duct, n., and misconduct', v., o'verthrow, n., and over'throw', v. In such cases, the nouns have the accent further from the end.

§ 120. With a very few exceptions, words of more than two syllables having the following terminations take the accent on the antepenult, or last syllable but two: —

- cracy; as, democ'racy, theo'cracy;
- ferous; as, somni'ferous, umbelli'ferous;
- fluent; as, af'fluent, circum'fluent;
- fluous; as, melli'fluous, super'fluous;
- gonal; as, diag'onal, hexag'onal;
- gony; as, cosmog'ony, theo'gony;
- grapher; as, lexicog'rapher, stenog'rapher;
- graphy; as, photog'raphy, typog'raphy;
- loger; as, philol'oger, astrol'oger;
- logist; as, entomol'ogist, physiol'ogist;
- logy; as, chronol'ogy, mythol'ogy;
- loquy; as, col'loquy, solil'oquy;
- machy; as, logom'achy, theo'm'achy;
- mathy; as, chrestom'athy, polym'athy;
- meter; as, barom'eter, hygrom'eter;
- metry; as, altim'etry, geom'etry;
- nomy; as, astron'omy, econ'omy;
- parous; as, ovip'arous, virip'arous;

pathy; as, ap'athy, antip'athy;
-phony; as, antiph'ony, coloph'ony;
-scopy; as, aeros'copy, deuteros'copy;
-strophe; as, apos'trophe, catas'trophe;
-tomy; as, anat'omy, lithot'omy;
-trophy; as, at'rophy, hyper'trophy;
-vorous, as, flammiv'orous, igniv'orous;
-vorous, as, carniv'orous, graminiv'orous.

§ 121. Words of more than two syllables, ending in -cate, -date, -gate, -fy, -tude, and -ty, preceded by a vowel, have, for the most part, the accent on the antepenult; as, dep'recate, rus'ticate, recip'rocate; an'tedate, clu'cidate, ac-com'modate; prop'agate, dcl'cgate, fu'migate; rar'efy, sanctify; quie'tude, lat'itude; soci'ety, acid'ity, dep'uty.

§ 122. The penultimate syllable is to be accented in almost all words having the sound of sh, of zh, or of consonant y immediately before their last vowel or diphthong, except those words in which ch is sounded like sh (as capuchin, kap-yŋ-sheen'); e. g., dona'tion, conces'sion, illu'sion, controver'sial, vermil'ion, opin'ion.

THE TERMINATIONS IC AND ICS.

§ 123. Words ending in ic and ics (derivatives from words in ικος or ικος, in Greek or Latin, or formed after the same analogy) have their accent on the penult; as, epi-demic, scientific, &c. The following words are exceptions, having the accent on the antepenult; viz., ag'aric, Ar'abic, arith'metic, ar'senic, n., cath'olic, chol'eric, ephem'eric, her-etic, lu'natic, pleth'oric, pol'itic, rhet'oric, and tur'meric. Climacteric has usually the antepenultimate accent, though some pronounce it climacter'ic. In like manner, the nouns emp'iric and schism'atic, and the noun and adjective sple-netic, are sometimes accented on the penult, and sometimes on the antepenult.

THE TERMINATIONS E-AL, E-AN, AND E-UM.

§ 124. A part of the words having these terminations follow the English analogy, and take the antepenultimate accent; as, ceru'lean, hyperbo'rean, Hercu'lean, Mediterra-nean, subterra'nean, Tarta'rean, marmo'rean; petro'leum, perios'teum, succeda'neum. A part accent the penult; as, adamante'an, Atlante'an, colosse'an, empyre'an, Epicure'an, Europe'an, pygme'an; mausole'um, muse'um. Orphean, being derived from Or'pheus (or'fūs), is more properly accented Or'phean. Most words ending in eal accent the antepenult; as, lin'eal, ethe'real, fun'eal; but hymene'al and ide'al take the accent upon the penult.

THE TERMINATION OSE.

§ 125. There is a considerable number of adjectives ending in ose, as animose, comatose, operose, &c., in the accentuation of which the dictionaries are at variance with each other, and many of them inconsistent with themselves. But all words of this class, as Walker remarks, ought, from their form and derivation, to be pronounced alike. Walker himself accents them all upon the last syllable, and in this he is followed by Worcester and Cooley; but, in trisyllables having this termination, most recent authorities, following the natural tendency of the language, as well as the prevailing usage, give only a secondary accent to the last syllable, placing the principal accent on the antepenult. (See § 110, NOTE, second paragraph.) As to dissyllabic adjectives ending in ose, as jocose, verbose, mo-rose, &c., they take the accent on the last syllable, with a few exceptions.

§ 126. In poetry, words are frequently used with an accentuation different from that adopted in ordinary speech, as in the following examples:—

'Twixt that and reason what a nice barrier'!
 Forever separate, yet forever near. Pope.

Ye icefalls! ye that from the mountain's brow
 Adown enormous rav'ines slope amain. Coleridge.

§ 127. When two words of similar formation and the same accentuation are contrasted with each other, the accent is transferred to the syllable of difference (unless this is already accented, as in em'inent, im'minent), and the regularly accented syllable takes a secondary accent; thus, undo' is pronounced un'do' when opposed to do or to out'do', and in'tervene' is pronounced in'tervene' when used antithetically to su'pervene'. So also with am'puta'tion and im'puta'tion, bi'en'nial and tri'en'nial, op'pose' and sup'pose'; ex'er'cise and ex'or'cise, al-le'ga'tion and al-li-ga'tion; proph'et' and profit'; do'nor' and do'nee', guar'antor' and guar'antee'.

§ 128. When separately pronounced, all monosyllabic words have their vowel as distinctly sounded as if under accent. But in connected discourse, certain classes of monosyllables, such as articles, prepositions, pronouns, conjunctions, and auxiliary verbs, are usually unemphasized, and their vowel is liable to the same corruption of quality as that in an unaccented syllable of a word. But when used antithetically to other words, they are emphasized, receiving a full and distinct stress of voice. Thus, the possessive pronoun their, when emphatic, should take the full sound of ê; as, "Their (thêr) interests, and not yours, are to be consulted." But when unemphatic, the sound becomes more obscure, verging toward, or falling into, that of the neutral vowel (u in urge); as, "They will not neglect their (thur) interests." So, also, there, when used as an adverb of place, is distinctly pronounced with the appropriate sound of the vowel; as, "I shall be there (thêr)." When, however, it serves merely to introduce a verb or a sentence, it takes the obscurer sound; as, "There (thur) is no difficulty in the case." In like manner we say â, yqur, thât, thê, frôm, fôr, &c., when we pronounce the words by themselves; but in actual use they become nearly or quite ũ, yur, thüt, thũ, frôm, fur, &c. The following passage from the Spectator, No. 80, well illustrates this tendency to a corruption of the vowel sound in unemphasized monosyllables:—"My lords, with humble submission thât that I say is this, thât thât thât thât gentleman has advanced is not thât that he should have proved to your lordships."

SYLLABICATION.

§ 129. Words are sometimes divided into syllables for the sole purpose of showing their proper pronunciation (as, a-dorn, o-void); and sometimes in order to exhibit their etymological composition merely, without the least regard to their pronunciation (as, ad-orn, ov-oid). In ordinary cases—as where a word requires to be divided at the end of a line—these modes of syllabication are to a certain extent combined. In the United States, the etymological principle is allowed to operate only in separating prefixes, suffixes, and grammatical terminations from the radical part of the word, where this can be done without misrepresenting the pronunciation. In English practice, however, words are usually divided in such a manner as to show their constituent parts independently of the pronunciation (as, hypo-thesis, philo-sophy, belli-gerent, &c.), and a single consonant or a consonant digraph between two vowels goes to the latter (as, a-na-to-my, de-li-cate, ma-the-ma-tics, &c.). In this Dictionary, words are uniformly divided so as to represent their pronunciation in the most accurate manner: but very frequently the root of a word may be exhibited to the eye without violating the orthoëpical principle of syllabication, and, where this is possible, it has generally been done, more particularly in the case of accented syllables.

PRINCIPLES OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

OBSERVATIONS.

THE English language, as being the offspring of two parent languages very different in form and spirit, and having been, in no inconsiderable degree, modified in its growth by influences from various other tongues, contains, as was inevitable, very many anomalies; and in no particular are these anomalies more numerous and striking than in its orthography, with the single exception, perhaps, of its orthoëpy. Neither the Anglo-Saxon nor the Norman-French could boast of any great regularity in orthography, though the spelling of words in these two languages was far less arbitrary than it is in the modern English. When, therefore, the vocabularies of these two languages, widely different both in their orthographical structure and their phonological character, were combined, the result was a language in which the orthography has almost reached the extreme of irregularity. To such an extent, in fact, have the signs representing sounds been multiplied, that many of the letters are pronounced in several different ways, while the letters, or combinations of letters, for a single sound amount, in some cases, to scores. Indeed, it is computed that many words of no more than two syllables may be spelled in several thousand different modes, by the use of combinations actually employed in other words in the language. The word scissors, for instance, may be thus written, as is computed by Ellis, in nearly six thousand different ways. Of course, comparatively very few of these possible forms of spelling are ever employed in the case of any one word; yet the causes of disorder mentioned above have operated so effectually, that the words in respect to which even the most careful writers are at variance are numbered by thousands, while those in which an orthography contrary to analogy has been universally adopted are equally numerous.

Bad, however, as is the orthography of the present day, it is order itself compared with that of a few centuries ago. It would, of course, be unreasonable to expect that there should be any general correspondence of orthographical forms in the works of different authors before the types of the printer gave prominence to certain forms, which finally became recognized as standards; and manuscripts conclusively prove that the wildest license prevailed in spelling words. Even proper names, which would naturally receive more attention, and be written with more care than any other class of words, are found recorded in great multitudes of forms, several variations being sometimes found in the same manuscript or work. Disraeli states that "Leicester has subscribed his own name eight different ways," and that "the name Villers is spelled fourteen different ways in the deeds of that family." A still more remarkable instance is stated by Lower; namely, that the family of Mainwaring has the extraordinary number of one hundred and thirty-one variations of that single name, all drawn from authorized documents. But there is evidence that, in the midst of all this confusion, there were some writers who were attentive to the proper forms of words, and who were notable exceptions to the general rule. The spelling of the Ormulum, which was written in the thirteenth century, though strange and cumbrous, is very remarkable for its regularity; and the author strenuously urges his copyists to follow his orthography with the utmost exactness. So also Chaucer, more than a century later, carefully revised and corrected his own works; and he enjoined upon his scribe to "write more trew" that which was intrusted to him, saying that he was obliged "it to correct and eke to rubbe and serape," because of the negligence and haste with which it had been copied.

The invention of printing began a new era, though for a long time even this had little effect to fix the exterior form of the language. Indeed, much of the perverse orthography of books printed two or three centuries ago is to be attributed to the printer, who often inserted or expunged letters, as the length of the lines or convenience of spacing required. It is no uncommon thing to find, in the works of Chaucer, Spenser, and other early writers, or in books printed two or three centuries ago, the same words occurring in several different forms upon the same page. Even as late as the time of Shakespeare, orthography was very unsettled; and, as Halliwell states, the name of the great bard himself was written in more than thirty different ways. The printers, however, were not solely, nor even chiefly, responsible for this confusion; for it is certain that their arbitrary changes and deviations from uniformity would not have been tolerated had they been made in defiance of established usage; and there is abundant evidence to prove that writers themselves were careless in the extreme. The fact must not be overlooked that in the writings of Wycliffe, Chaucer, and other early authors, there were still many remnants of the Semi-Saxon inflection, which have since utterly disappeared, and which gave to some words a variety of form to be attributed neither to the carelessness of the writer, nor to an unsettled orthography.

The irregularities found in early books, though continuing for so long a time, were neither unnoticed nor looked upon with indifference. On the contrary, not only have numerous complete systems for the reformation of orthography been proposed, but various scholars have advocated, with more or less acuteness and learning, changes in regard to a great number of particular points. Sir Thomas Smith, Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, was the first who endeavored to introduce a regular system of orthography; after him, William Bullokar brought forward another system; a few years after this, Dr. Gill, Master of St. Paul's School, in London, a teacher of considerable eminence, proposed another scheme; and, still later, Charles Butler devised a new method of spelling, and printed a book in which it was employed. These writers agreed essentially as to the manner in which they sought to attain the end proposed, their plan being to reduce the spelling of words to uniform principles and make it practically phonetic, by the use of new characters, by applying various diacritical marks to the old letters, and by making the letters, or their combinations, represent certain definite sounds. It is needless to say, that these projects were never carried into practice.

In the time of Charles I., many changes were introduced, and it was very common, even among eminent scholars, to spell words according to their pronunciation, omitting such letters as were deemed superfluous. These attempts at improvement, being made upon no settled or uniform principles, had little or no permanent effect upon the language. Another elaborate plan was proposed, in the seventeenth century, by Bishop Wilkins, similar in its general character to those of Smith, Bullokar, Gill, and Butler, and equally unsuccessful.

The celebrated Dictionary of Dr. Samuel Johnson, first published in 1755, has contributed more than any work written either before or since, to fix the external form of the language and to diminish the number of irregularities; for, though numerous inconsistencies are to be found in it, and many oversights, the learning of the author, and the sound judgment and practical wisdom which he displayed, gave it at once an authority which it has not even yet entirely lost; and the orthography of the present day, though it has received some important modifications since his time, is substantially the same as that exhibited in his dictionary. The changes in the spelling of words, introduced by Dr. Johnson, were generally made in order to restore the ancient orthography, or to remove some anomaly; and perhaps the most important office performed by his work was its having settled usage definitely in favor of some one of the numerous forms in which many words were written, thus removing the cause of much confusion. Among the most prominent alterations made by him were the restoration of k to many words which had long been written without it, as in musick, rhetorick, and the like, and the insertion of u in the termination of many words which previously ended in or, as in ancestour, authour, errour, and others. The former of these changes, a revival of the "ancient practice," was not received with favor, nor was this spelling adopted by subsequent writers; the latter, as it was thought to be justified by the analogy of the corresponding termination eur in the French, through which language many, perhaps a majority, of the words affected by it were derived from the Latin, was generally followed. Johnson's practice in this respect, however, was not in harmony with his theory; for he wrote only about half the words of this class with the ending our, leaving the rest in or, though for no reason that would not equally apply to them all. Yet this notable inconsistency was not only overlooked, but was perpetuated, and still exists in the orthography of English writers. In the United States a different practice prevails, as will presently be mentioned.

The scheme of Pinkerton, who, in 1785, under the name of Robert Heron, proposed to render the language more euphonious by adding vowels to words ending in consonants, and by pronouncing the silent final vowels of others, in a manner perfectly arbitrary, is too ridiculous to deserve further mention. About twenty years later another absurd plan was published by Elphinstone, who printed a book in order to introduce it, but without success. During the last century, several English divines, as Lardner, Benson, and others, employed in many words methods of spelling peculiar to themselves, chiefly such as had long been abandoned, as in writing ie for final y; in adding e to words ending in ss; and in the use of such forms as præface, persue, procede, sais (for says), and the like. So also Mitford used many singular forms, such as iland, intire, endevor, meer (for mere), tho (for though), spred, &c. It is proper to mention here also the innovations of Archdeacon Hare, in the present century, who, on the ground of pronunciation, etymology, and analogy, employed in his works such forms as atchieve, compell, enure, firy (for fiery), forein, invey (for inveigh), highth, plouhman, smugler, and the like. He also omitted the hyphen in many compound words where it is usually inserted, and advocated the omission of the apostrophe in the possessive case, and the substitution of t for ed in those preterits in which the latter termination is pronounced like t; as in exprest, fixt, publisht, &c., for expressed, fixed, published, &c. This substitution of t for ed, however, is not peculiar to Hare, since it is merely a return to the usage of the early writers. This spelling of the preterit is also not unfrequently found in modern poetry.

Besides the imperfect attempts mentioned above, many plans have been devised at different times, for reducing the spelling of words to absolute uniformity and the greatest simplicity, by a complete reform in the method of representing the sounds of words by written characters, that is, by employing a new alphabet in which each sign stands for one and only one definite sound, and each sound is represented by one and only one character. Such a method of spelling was invented by Dr. Franklin, in the last century, though he never brought it to perfection, and scarcely used it, except in a brief correspondence with a friend. The most recent, and in every respect the most comprehensive and philosophical scheme of this kind, is that of which Mr. Alexander John Ellis, of Cambridge, England, has been the most prominent advocate and representative, and to a large extent the inventor. The alphabet in this system contains about forty characters, each of which represents but a single sound, so that a word written according to this method could be pronounced in only one way. Although this system has received great publicity, and has had many earnest supporters, it has gained no ground in the public favor, and has finally been abandoned by its author as a means of reforming orthography. The schemes of Lepsius, Müller, and others who have endeavored to form philosophical alphabets of universal application, are hardly to be mentioned here, as they are but indirectly related to English orthography.

In 1828, Dr. Webster published his Dictionary of the English Language, and the changes in spelling advocated by him have had no inconsiderable influence upon orthography, especially in the United States. These alterations were proposed by him chiefly on the ground of etymology and of analogy, from a desire, on the one hand, to make the words correspond, as far as practicable, with their primitive forms, so as to reveal more clearly their etymological affinities, and on the other to reduce as much as possible the number of anomalies and exceptional cases. Of the words whose orthography had been changed for the former reason, many were restored to their ordinary forms by Dr. Webster himself in the second edition of his work published in 1840, and others still were restored in subsequent editions. The alterations of the second class have been received with favor and adopted by a large portion of the writers in the United States, and by some authors also in England.

It is to be observed that many of Dr. Webster's deviations from the usage of his time were not innovations, but restorations of older forms which were once very generally employed. The most important points in which his orthography differs from that of most other modern lexicographers, and in reference to which there is still difference of usage among scholars, are stated in the following list, in which the numbers refer to the sections of the Rules for Spelling Certain Classes of Words (see p. xxiii.), where the cases are mentioned particularly. These are, the not doubling the final consonant in derivatives of words like travel, worship, &c. (§ 8); doubling the l in installment, enrollment, &c. (§ 9); doubling the final letter in such words as fulfill, instill, &c. (§ 16); retaining the i in derivatives of villain (§ 27); writing defense, offense, &c., for defence, offence, &c., and practice for practise (§ 27); writing the termination er for re in words like center, meter, &c. (§ 31); writing mold and molt without u (§ 34).

With respect to certain cases, it seems proper to add a few words. Dr. Webster wrote the chemical terms ending in ide and ine, as chloride, chlorine, &c. (§ 32), without the final e in most cases, deeming the letter superfluous, and not demanded by usage, which was variable. This letter is retained in this volume, in accordance with the almost universal practice of the present day. The word written by Dr. Webster oxyd is now spelled oxide, for reasons stated in section 32 and under the word itself in the Dictionary. It may be remarked further with regard to words often written with the termination re, but which in this book are spelled with the ending er, that this orthography is but a restoration of the older spelling; and the same is true of the substitution of the termination or for our.

RULES FOR SPELLING CERTAIN CLASSES OF WORDS.

FOUNDED ON THE ORTHOGRAPHY OF DR. WEBSTER, AS EXHIBITED IN THIS VOLUME.

§ 1. The letters f and l, at the end of monosyllables, and standing immediately after single vowels, are generally doubled; as in staff, cliff, doff, puff; all, bell, hill, toll, null. The words clef, if, of, and sol, are exceptions.

§ 2. The letter s, at the end of a monosyllable, and standing immediately after a single vowel, is generally doubled, except when it is used to form the possessive case or plural of a noun, or the third person singular of a verb; as in grass, press, hiss, moss, truss. The only important exceptions are as, gas, has, was, yes, his, is, thus, and us.

§ 3. Besides f, l, and s, the only consonants that are ever doubled at the end of a word are b, d, g, m, n, p, r, t, and z. The following list contains all, or nearly all, the words in which these letters are doubled; namely, abb, ebb; add, odd, rudd; bigg, egg, snigg; lamm, scomm, mumm (to mask); inn, bunn; wapp; gnarr, parr, err, birr, shirr, skirr, burr, hurr, murr, purr; mitt, plitt, smitt, butt; fizz, fuzz, buzz, huzz, muzz.

NOTE. — The words let, net, and set are sometimes incorrectly spelled lett, nett, and sett; and some other words which should have the final letter single are spelled, by some writers, with it doubled.

§ 4. A consonant standing at the end of a word immediately after a diphthong or double vowel is never doubled. The words ail, peat, haul, door, and maim, are examples. The word guess is only an apparent exception, as the u does not strictly form a diphthong with the e, but serves merely to render the g hard.

§ 5. Monosyllables ending, as pronounced, with the sound of k, and in which c follows the vowel, have usually k added after the c; as in black, fleck, click, knock, and buck. The words lac, sac, talc, zinc, ploc, roc, soc, arc, marc, arc, and fisc, are exceptions.

Words of more than one syllable, ending in ic or iac, which formerly ended in k, also words derived from the Latin or Greek languages, or from other sources, and similar to these, or formed in an analogous manner, are now written without the k; as, maniac, elegiac, cubic, music, public. The word derrick is an exception. Words of more than one syllable, in which c is preceded by other vowels than i or ia, commonly end in ck; as, arrack, barrack, hammock, hillock, wedlock. The words almanac, sandarac, limbec, xebec, manioc, and havoc, are exceptions. Almanac, limbec, and havoc, however, are sometimes written with k after the c, especially in England.

§ 6. In derivatives formed from words ending in c, by adding a termination beginning with e, i, or y, the letter k is inserted after the c, in order that the latter may not be inaccurately pronounced like s before the following vowel: as, colic, colicky; traffic, trafficked, trafficking, trafficker; talc, talcky; zinc, zincky.

§ 7. In derivatives formed by adding a termination beginning with a vowel to monosyllables and words accented on the last syllable, when these words end in a single consonant (except x) preceded by a single vowel, that consonant is doubled: as, clan, clannish; plan, planned, planning, planner; bag, baggage; hot, hotter, hottest; wit, witty; cabal, cabal'ler; abet, abet'ted, abet'ting, abet'tor; begin, begin'ning, begin'ner; infer, inferred, infer'ring.

The consonant is doubled in these words in order to preserve the short sound of the vowel, as otherwise the latter would be liable to be pronounced long. Thus, planned, hottest, and abetted, would naturally be pronounced plāned, hōttest, and abēted, if the consonant were not doubled. Words of this class, in which the final consonant is preceded by qu, followed by a single vowel, form no exception to the rule, since the u performs the office of the consonant w; as, squab, squabbish, squabby; squat, squatting, squatter; quit, quitted, quitting; acquit, acquit'ted, acquit'ting.

The derivatives of the word gas (except gassing and gassy) are written with but one s; as, gaseous, gaseity, gasify. Ex'cellence, as being from the Latin excellens, retains the double l, though one l has been dropped from the termination of excel. Besides these, the only exceptions to the rule are those derivatives in which the accent of the primitive is thrown back upon another syllable: as, cabal, cab'alism, cab'alist; prefer, prefer'ence; refer, refer'ence; defer, defer'ence. It is no exception to this rule that cancellor, and the derivatives of metal and crystal, as metalloid, metallurgy, crystalline, crystallize, and the like, are written with the l doubled, since they are derived respectively from the Latin cancellarius (through the French), and metallum, and the Greek κρύσταλλος. So also the word tranquillity retains the double l as being from the Latin tranquillitas, while the English derivatives of tranquil, though often written with two l's, are more properly written with only one, as tranquillize, tranquillizer, and the like.

§ 8. When a diphthong, or a digraph representing a vowel sound, precedes the final consonant of a word, or the accent of a word ending in a single consonant falls on any other syllable than the last, or when the word ends in two different consonants, the final consonant is not doubled in derivatives formed by the addition of a termination beginning with a vowel: as, daub, daubed, dauber; need, needy; brief, brief'er, brief'est; rev'el, rev'eled, rev'eling; trav'el, trav'eling, trav'eler; profit, profited; act, acted, actor; perform, performer; stand, standing.

The final consonant is doubled in the derivatives of a few words ending in g, in order to diminish the liability to its being pronounced like j, before e or i: as, humbug, humbugged, humbugging; periwig, periwigged. The word woolen is more generally thus written, in the United States, with one l; but in England it is written woollen.

NOTE. — There is a large class of words ending in a single consonant, and accented on some other syllable than the last, the final consonants of which are, by very many writers and lexicographers, doubled in their derivatives, unnecessarily and contrarily to analogy. This practice appears to have arisen from a desire to prevent the vowel of the final syllable of the primitive from being inaccurately pronounced long in the derivatives. These words are chiefly those ending in l, with also a few of other terminations. The following list, the words in which are chiefly verbs, includes the most important of those in regard to which usage varies: namely, apparel, barrel, bevel, bias, bowel, and its compounds, cancel, carburet and all similar words ending in uret, cavil, carol, channel, chisel, compromit, counsel, cudgel, dial, dishevel, dowel, drivel, duel, empanel, enamel, equal, funnel, gambol, gravel, grovel, handsel, hatchet, imperil, jewel, kennel, kidnap, label, laurel, level, libel, marshal, marvel, medal, metal, model, panel, parallel, parcel, pencil, peril, pistol, pommel, quarrel, ravel, revel, rival, rowel, shovel, shrivel, snivel, tassel, tinsel, trammel, travel, tunnel, unravel, vial, victual, worship. Worcester doubles the final letters of all these words, except parallel, in forming derivatives by the addition of terminations beginning with vowels, though he remarks, with respect to those ending in l, that "it better accords with the analogy of the language" to spell their derivatives with but one l. Smart retains the double consonant in this class of words solely on the ground that usage favors it, but remarks that "the double p in worshipped, worshipper, &c., the second l in travelling, traveller, &c., are quite unnecessary on any other score than to satisfy the prejudices of the eye." Cooley doubles the consonant in a majority of the derivatives of words of this class, but writes a single consonant in many, as in those of apparel, barrel, bevel, channel, drivel, gambol, &c. Perry wrote the derivatives of these words with but one l, according to the rule, and the same practice was advocated by Walker. Conformity to the regular rule has been advocated also by Lowth and other eminent scholars.

§ 9. Derivatives formed from words ending in a double consonant, by adding one or more syllables, commonly retain both consonants: as, ebb, ebbing; odd, oddly; stiff, stiffness; fell, fellable; skill, skillful, skillfulness; will, willful, willfulness; dull, dullness; full, fullness. So also the double l is retained in the words installment, intrallment, thralldom, and enrollment (from install, intrall, thrall, and enroll), in order to prevent the false pronunciation they might receive if spelled with one l. Many writers and lexicographers, especially in England, omit one l in these words, as also in the derivatives of skill, will, dull, and full, formed by adding the syllables ly and ness.

The derivatives of pontiff are exceptions to the rule, being written with only one f; as, pontific, pontifical, pontifical, and the like. One l is also dropped in a few words formed by adding the termination ly to words ending in ll, in order to prevent the concurrence of three l's; as, ill, illy; dull, dully; full, fully. Words similarly formed by adding the termination less, however, are written either with the three l's, a hyphen being inserted before the termination, or with two l's, and without the hyphen; as bell-less, or belless, skill-less or skillless, smell-less or smellless.

§ 10. In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, the e is generally retained when the termination begins with a consonant: as, pale, paleness; hate, hateful; incite, incitement; chaste, chastely, chasteness; move, movement. When, however, the e is immediately preceded by another vowel (except e), it is often dropped from the derivative: as, due, duly; argue, argument; true, truly; awe, awful; and the derivatives and compounds of these words.

The words wholly, nursling, wisdom, abridgment, acknowledgment, lodgment, judgment, and the compounds of some of these, are exceptions. The last four, however, are written, by many authors, abridgement, acknowledgement, lodgement, judgement.

§ 11. In derivatives formed from words ending with silent e, when the termination begins with a vowel, the e is generally omitted, except in the cases mentioned in the next paragraph: as, bride, bridal; guide, guidance; plume, plumage; use, usage; grieve, grievance; come, coming; shape, shaping; move, movable; sale, salable; fleece, fleecy; force, forcible; true, truism.

The e is retained in the word hoeing, shoeing, and toeing (from hoe, shoe, and toe), in order to prevent a doubt as to the pronunciation, that might arise in case it were omitted. It is retained, also, in the words dyeing, singeing, springe- ing, swingeing, tingeing (from dye, singe, springe, swinge, tinge), to distinguish them from dying, singing, springing, swinging, tinging (from die, sing, spring, swing, ting). The word mileage, as commonly written, does not omit the e, though it is sometimes, and more correctly, spelled milage. The words lineage, lineal, and pineal, though apparently exceptions, are not really such, since they are derived not directly from line and pine, but from the Latin linea (through the French), linealis, and pineae. The e, standing in a derivative, before a termination beginning with a or o, and immediately after c or g, is retained in order to preserve the soft sounds of these consonants; as, peace, peaceable; notice, noticeable; manage, manageable; change, changeable; advantage, advantageous; outrage, outrageous; mortgage, mortgageor. The latter word is sometimes very improperly written mortgagor, and pronounced mor'ga-jor.

§ 12. In derivatives formed from words ending in ie, by adding the termination ing, the e is dropped, and the i changed to y, in order to prevent two i's from coming together: as, die, dying; hie, hying; lie, lying; tie, tying; vie, vying.

§ 13. In derivatives of words ending in y, preceded by a consonant, and formed by appending any termination except one beginning with i, the y is usually changed into i: as, icy, iciest, icily; mercy, merciless; tidy, tidiness; modify, modifies; foggy, fogginess; earthy, earthiness; pity, pitiful.

The derivatives of adjectives of one syllable ending in y, preceded by a consonant, are exceptions, and usually retain the y: as, shy, shyness; sly, slyest; dry, dryly; spry, spryer, spryest; wry, wryness. But the adjectives drier, and driest, from dry, are commonly written with i instead of y. Derivatives formed by adding the termination ship, as secretaryship, suretyship, ladyship, and the like, also retain the y, though some authors write them with i, according to the rule. The words babyhood and ladykin are likewise exceptions. The y is also retained in the possessive case singular of nouns, when formed by adding s with the apostrophe; as, country's, everybody's.

§ 14. Derivatives formed by affixing a termination to words ending in y preceded by a vowel, generally retain the y unchanged: as, gay, gayety, gayly; play, player, plays; sway, swayed; obey, obeying; joy, joyful; enjoy, enjoyed; buy, buying; gluey, glueyness.

The words daily, laid, paid, said, saith, slain, and staid (from day, lay, pay, say, slay, and stay), with their compounds, are exceptions. Staid, however, is sometimes written stayed. Derivatives from words ending in uy, as colloquies, from colloquy, are not exceptions to the rule, as u, in such cases, is not strictly a vowel, but stands for the consonant w.

§ 15. Derivatives formed by appending a syllable beginning with a vowel to words ending with a vowel sound, generally retain the letter or letters representing such sound: as, huzza, huzzaed; agree, agreeable, agreeing; weigh, weighing; dough, doughy; echo, echoed; woo, woos; bow, bowed; beau, beanish.

Derivatives of words of this class ending in silent e, as also those formed from words ending in double e, by adding a termination beginning with e, drop the final e: as, hoe, hoed; sue, sued; owe, owed; free, freer, freest; agree, agreed. The cases mentioned in sections 11, 12, and 13 are also exceptions.

§ 16. Derivatives formed by prefixing one or more syllables to words ending in a double consonant commonly retain both consonants: as, tipstaff, rebuff, befall, intrall, disintrall, foretell, undersell, fulfill, enroll, emboss (from staff, buff, fall, thrall, tell, sell, fill, roll, boss).

The word until is an exception, being always written with one l. Those words of this class which end in ll are written by some authors, especially in England, with one l: as, befal, intral, foretel, fulfil, enrol. The words distill and instill should be written with the l doubled, though they are often written distil and instil, with only one i.

§ 17. Compound words formed by joining two or more words commonly retain all the letters of the simple words; as, stiff-necked, well-bred, dull-eyed, save-all, wide-mouthed.

There are numerous exceptions to this rule, many of them compounds which by long use have acquired the force of single words. They are the following: namely, some compounds of all and well; as, almighty, almost, alone, already, also, although, altogether, always, withal, therewithal, wherewithal, welcome, welfare; — compounds of mass; as, Candlemas, Christmas, Lammas, Michaelmas, &c.; — words of which the second part is the adjective full; as, artful, hateful, rueful, woeful; — also, the words chilblain, fulfill, namesake, neckerchief, numskull, pastime, standish, and wherever.

§ 18. The plural of nouns regularly ends in s, or, in certain classes of words, in es.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound that the sound of s can unite with it, and be pronounced without forming a separate syllable, s only is added in forming the plural: as, sea, seas; tree, trees; woe, woes; canto, cantos; virtue, virtues; purlieu, purlieus; claw, claws; cab, cabs; panic, panics; bead, beads; chief, chiefs; bag, bags; path, paths; lock, locks; bell, bells; gem, gems; fan, fans; cup, cups; ear, ears; act, acts. A few plurals from nouns ending in o preceded by a consonant, end in es; as, echo, echoes; cargo, cargoes; embargo, embargoes; motto, mottos; potato, potatoes. Other nouns of this class generally form their plurals regularly, though usage differs with regard to some of them. Those in which final o is preceded by a vowel form their plurals regularly. The plural of alkali is written alkalis or alkalies; that of rabbi, either rabbis or rabbies. With regard to other nouns ending in i usage differs, though they are more properly written with the termination is.

When the noun in the singular ends with such a sound (as that of ch, sh, j, s, x, or z) that the sound of s can not unite with it in pronunciation, but must form a separate syllable, e is inserted before s in forming the plural, unless the word ends with silent e, in which case the latter serves to form a separate syllable with s: as, church, churches; rush, rushes; age, ages; lace, laces; gas, gases; case, cases; loss, losses; box, boxes; maze, mazes.

To express the plural of a letter, figure, or any character or sign, or of a word mentioned without regard to its meaning, the letter s, generally preceded by the apostrophe, is appended, as in the phrases, "The two l's in all;" "The two o's in 400;" "Two **s* in Orion;" "The why's and wherefore's of the question." Some writers, however, omit the apostrophe in such cases, joining the s immediately to the letter, character, or word, as in the phrases "The two ls in all;" "Two **s* in Orion;" "The pros and cons." Others still write the names of the letters with their proper plural endings, instead of the letters themselves; as, the two ees, efs, ells, esses, and the like. The plurals of letters are also rarely expressed by simply doubling them, without adding any plural sign; as, the two ee in bee, the two ll in all; but this practice is not to be commended, as ee, ll, &c., are properly read double e, double l, and the like.

§ 19. Nouns ending in y preceded by a consonant form their plural by adding es and changing y into i: as, mercy, mercies; lady, ladies; sky, skies; army, armies; pity, pities. This rule includes words ending in quy, in which u, being pronounced like w, is strictly a consonant; as colloquy, colloquies. The plural of proper nouns ending in y preceded by a consonant, is formed by changing y into ies, according to the rule; as, "The three Maries." Many writers, however, form the plural of such words by simply adding s: as, "The three Marys;" but for this practice there seems to be no good reason.

When the singular of a noun ends in y preceded by a vowel (except u having the power of w), the plural is regularly formed by adding s only: as, day, days; key, keys; money, moneys; attorney, attorneys; alloy, alloys; guy, guys. Some plurals of the latter class are often inaccurately written with the termination ies: as, monies, attornies, and the like.

NOTE. — Nouns now ending in y formerly ended in ie, and formed their plurals regularly by adding s: as, memorie, memories; mercie, mercies. Y was finally substituted for ie in the singular, but the plural was not changed, and still retains its old form.

§ 20. The plurals of a few nouns ending in f or fe are irregularly formed by changing f or fe into ves. The following words, with their compounds, are the principal examples: namely, life, lives; knife, knives; wife, wives; leaf, leaves; sheaf, sheaves; loaf, loaves; beef, beeves; thief, thieves; calf, calves; half, halves; elf, elves; shelf, shelves; self, selves; wolf, wolves. The plural of staff is sometimes written staffs, but more commonly staves, except when it means a corps of officers, either military or civil, in which sense it is always written staffs. The plural of wharf is generally written wharfs in England; in the United States it is more commonly, but improperly, written wharves, as it is also by some recent English writers. The plurals of hoof and turf, formerly written hooves and turves, are now written hoofs and turfs. The plurals of other nouns ending in f, fe, or ff, are formed regularly by the addition of s only.

§ 21. In the following nouns, the plural is distinguished from the singular only by a change of the vowel or vowel sound of the word: namely, man, men; woman, women; goose, geese; foot, feet; tooth, teeth; brother, brethren; louse, lice; mouse, mice. Compounds ending with these words form their plurals in the same manner: as, foeman, foemen; dormouse, dormice. Words which end in the syllable man, and are not compounds, form their plurals regularly, by adding s only: as, cayman, caymans; desman, desmans; firman, *firman*s; talisman, *talisman*s; German, Germans; Mussulman, Mussulmans. The plurals of talisman and Mussulman are sometimes, by a gross blunder, written talismen and Mussulmen.

§ 22. A few plurals end in en: namely, brother, brethren; child, children; ox, oxen. To these may be added the obsolete forms eyne, kine, shoon, hosen, housen (from eye, cow, shoe, hose, house), the first three of which, though they have received a slightly different form, end, as pronounced, with the sound of n.

§ 23. The words brother, die, pea, and penny, have each two plurals of different forms and with different significations: as, brothers, male children of the same parent, also, members of the same society, association, class, or profession; brethren, members of the same religious or ecclesiastical body, the word in this form being rarely used except in religious writings, or in scriptural language, where it also has the same meaning that brother has in ordinary language; dies, implements for making impressions by stamping, or for making screws, also the cubical parts of pedestals; dice, the cubical blocks used in games of chance; peas, seeds of the pea-plant, when a definite number is mentioned; pease, the same in bulk, or spoken of collectively; pennies, the coins, especially when a definite number is mentioned; pence, the amount reckoned by these coins. See also these words in the Dictionary. The word acquaintance is written, in the plural, either acquaintance (supposed to be a corruption of acquaintants) or acquaintances, the two forms having little or no difference of meaning.

§ 24. A few words, mostly names of animals, have the same form in the plural as in the singular; as, deer, sheep, trout, and the like.

§ 25. Many words adopted from foreign languages retain their original plurals: as, datum, data; criterion, criteria; genus, genera; larva, larvæ; crisis, crises; matrix, matrices; focus, foci; monsieur, messieurs.

Many words of this class, while retaining the original plurals, have also a second, formed after the analogy of English words of similar termination: as, formula, formulæ or formulas; beau, beaux or beaus; index, indices, or indexes; stratum, strata or stratums; bandit, banditti or bandits; cherub, cherubim or cherubs; seraph, seraphim or seraphs. The plurals of the last two words are sometimes incorrectly written cherubims and seraphims, with double plural terminations, from ignorance or forgetfulness of the fact that, in Hebrew words, im is a plural ending.

§ 26. In certain loose compounds consisting of a noun followed by an adjective or other qualifying expression, the plural is commonly formed by making the same change in the noun as when it stands alone: as, court-martial, courts-martial; cousin-german, cousins-german; son-in-law, sons-in-law. When, however, the adjective is so closely joined to the noun that the compound has the force of a simple word, the plural of the compound is commonly formed like that of any other word of the same termination: as, cupful, cupfuls; handful, handfuls.

§ 27. There are many words, besides those mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, in respect to which usage, even that of the best authors, is variable. The most important of these words are mentioned in this and the succeeding sections.

The derivatives of the word villain, as villainous, villainy, &c., though often written villanous, villany, &c., properly retain the i, according to the practice of many writers, like those of other words similarly ending in ain: as, mountainous, from mountain; captaincy, from captain; and the like.

The words connection, deflection, inflection, and reflection, follow the spelling of the words connect, deflect, inflect, and reflect, though often written, especially in England, connexion, deflexion, inflexion, and reflexion. See Note under CONNECTION, in the Dictionary.

The word woe, though often written without the final e, should retain it, like most other nouns of one syllable and of similar form; as, doe, floe, foe, hoe, sloe, toe, and the like. Monosyllables other than nouns, and words of more than one syllable, having a similar termination, omit the e; as, do, go, no, so, canto, motto, potato.

The words defense, expense, offense, and pretense are properly written thus, though often spelled with c instead of s, for the s belongs to the words from which they are derived, and is also used in all their derivatives. See Note under OFFENSE, in the Dictionary.

The words drought and height were formerly written drouth and hight, and are still very often thus written in America.

The verb practice is thus written like the noun, in preference to the form practise, though the latter spelling is used by many writers, especially in England. The difference in spelling between the noun and the verb is properly observed, in words of this kind, only in such as are accented on the last syllable, as device, devise. See Note under PRACTISE, in the Dictionary.

Derivatives of the Greek ἔδρα (seat, base, side; pronounced héd'ra), as polyhedron, tetrahedron, octahedral, and the like, are properly thus written with h before the e of the termination, but are sometimes written polyedron, tetraëdron, octaëdral, &c., without the h.

§ 28. There is a class of adjectives ending either in able or in ible, of which a large majority have the termination able: as, blamable, laudable, legible, mutable, navigable, vendible. Many of them are from Latin words ending in abilis or ibilis; some are from the French; and not a few are formed by adding the termination to English words. Those from Latin words end respectively in able or ible, according as they are derived from words ending in abilis or ibilis: as, mutable (Lat. mutabilis); potable (Lat. potabilis); credible (Lat. credibilis); vendible (Lat. vendibilis). Those formed from English words generally end in able; as, avoidable, eatable, fordable, laughable, liable, salable, serviceable. There are a few words respecting which usage is variable: as, addible or addable; conversable or conversible; inferable or infer'rible; referable or refer'rible.

§ 29. There is a class of words beginning with en or in, as enclose or inclose, enquire or inquire, ensure or insure, and the like, many of which take either form of the prefix indifferently. They are chiefly derived from the Latin, either directly or through the French, the prefix in belonging to the former language, and en to the latter. In some of these words, en is to be preferred; in others, in; in many of them, either may be used indifferently. See the List of Words Spelled in Two or More Ways, and the different words of this class in the Dictionary.

§ 30. There was formerly considerable diversity of usage in respect to the terminations ant and ent, both of which were in certain cases used almost indifferently; as in the words confidant or confident, dependant or dependent, and the like. Present usage, however, is definitely settled in favor of one or the other form, in nearly or quite every word of this class, though not always upon uniform principles. In the few words in which both these terminations are retained, it is the more general practice to write the adjective with ent, and the common noun with ant, while the corresponding abstract noun ends in ence, as in the adjectives confident and dependent, the common nouns confidant and dependant, and the abstract nouns confidence and dependence. In the case of very many words, however, the adjective ends in ant, as also the common noun; while the abstract noun ends in ence, as in the adjectives attendant and repentant; the common nouns attendant and repentant; and the abstract nouns attendance and repentance. It may be remarked that the terminations ant and ence belong properly to words derived from the French or from Latin verbs of the first conjugation; ent and ence to words derived from Latin verbs of the other three conjugations. Ence and ance were also formerly confounded in some words, the one or the other being used indifferently.

§ 31. There is a class of words ending in er, some of which are written by most authors with the termination re; as, center, meter, theater, &c., which are often written centre, metre, theatre, &c. Acre, chancre, lucre, nacre, massacre, and ogre, retain the termination re, in order to preserve the hard sound of the c and g.

§ 32. There are two classes of chemical words ending respectively, as more commonly written, in ide and ine, in regard to which usage has been variable. Most of them were formerly written without the final e; but it is now the almost universal practice to retain it: as, bromide, chloride, iodide, sulphide; chlorine, fluorine, salicine, stearine; and the like. The word tannin is always written without the final e. Oxide is now generally written with the termination ide, though formerly by many written oxyd, from the supposition that the y of the last syllable represented the ο of the Greek ὀξύς, from which the word is derived; whereas the last syllable is simply the same as the termination of the words bromide, sulphide, and the like. See Note under OXIDE, in the Dictionary.

§ 33. There is a class of words ending as pronounced, with the sound of long i, followed by z, some of which are differently written, by different authors, with either ise or ize to represent this sound: as, criticize or criticise; civilize or civilise; naturalize or naturalise; patronize or patronise. These words are mostly verbs, and are chiefly derived from Greek words ending in ίζω, or from French words ending in iser or ise. There are a few from other sources, but formed in analogy with those derived from these languages. Those formed from Greek words have the termination ize; as anathematize, characterize, dramatize, tantalize. The words catechise and exorcise are exceptions. Those formed in an analogous manner from English words are likewise written with ize; as, albumenize, bastardize, memorize, sensitize. Those derived from the French verb prendre (participle pris or prise) end in ise; as, apprise, comprise, emprise, enterprise, surprise. Of those formed from French words other than prendre, or which have corresponding forms in the French, a majority end in ize, though in respect to some of them usage is variable; as, civilize, formalize, organize, satirize. The following are the principal English verbs ending in ise: namely, advertise, advise, affranchise, apprise, catechise, chastise, circumcise, comprise, compromise, criticise, demise, despise, devise, disenfranchise, disfranchise, disguise, divertise, emprise, enfranchise, enterprise, exercise, exorcise, franchise, manumise, misprise, premise, reprise, revise, supervise, surmise, surprise. It may be remarked that most of those in respect to which usage varies are more frequently written in England with the termination ise, and in the United States with the termination ize.

§ 34. The words mold and molt, and their compounds and derivatives, are written in this Dictionary with o instead of ou, in analogy with the words bold, bolt, colt, gold, &c., from which the u has been dropped. Most authors, however, write these words mould and moult, and their derivatives in like manner.

§ 35. There is a numerous class of words almost universally written, in the United States, with the termination or, many of which are written, in England, with the termination our; as, candor, favor, honor, labor, rumor, vigor. English usage, however, is not uniform with respect to these words, many of them being written with or in English books. See the Observations on Orthography, prefixed to these rules.

§ 36. There is a small class of words ending with the syllable ped (from Lat. pes, pedis, foot), the termination of some of which was formerly, and is still frequently, written pede; as, biped, centiped, milliped, palmiped, quadruped, soliped, and the like. The words biped and quadruped are universally written without the final e, and the others, according to the best usage, should be written in the same manner.

A LIST OF WORDS SPELLED IN TWO OR MORE WAYS.

The design of the following List is, in the first place, to present those words in reference to which present usage, in the United States or in England, sanctions more than one method of spelling the same word; and, secondly, a considerable number of words, which, though not differently spelled by living reputable writers, yet are to be found in the orthography of the second column in the works of respectable authors of the last century, or the early part of the present century, and are, therefore, often presented to the eye of the modern reader. Such a list, it is thought, will be found very convenient for consultation. For any thing more full, a Glossary would be the appropriate resort. The first column, in the following List, presents the orthography recognized in the body of this Dictionary as the preferable one, or that in general use; the second column, one less desirable, or the usage of former times. Those forms in the second column which a good writer at the present day would not probably employ, but which are found only in writings of the past, have a dagger prefixed. One class of words which might properly have been added, is, from their great number, omitted. It is that of words of more than one syllable ending in ic or ick: as, music, musick, public, publick, &c. It is deemed sufficient to mention the class, and to state that the termination in ick is wholly disused. A similar remark is applicable to a portion of the words terminating formerly in our, now in or. Those of this class in the following List, in which both forms are given, are still sometimes used in both forms, the termination in or being that most favored in the United States, while our is the form generally preferred in England. Words of this class not given in the List are used only in or by living writers. Subject to a like remark is a class of words terminating in ise or ize; as, systematise or systematize, &c., — the latter being the mode in which such words are spelled in America, and the former that adopted by English printers. When in this List the word in the first column is followed by or, as, "Abatis, or Abattis," it is implied that the second form is nearly, often quite, in as good use as the first.

PREFIXES AND SUFFIXES.

PREFIXES.

A.

A, a prefix to many English words, is in some cases a contraction of the prepositions on, in, at, of, to, for; as in asleep for in sleep or on sleep, ablaze for in a blaze, aboard for on board, afoot for on foot, aground for on the ground, adays for on days, ado for to do, await for wait for. In other cases, it is contracted from the A.-S. inseparable particle ge- (in Gothic ga-), which forms verbs from verbs, substantives, adjectives, and is a sort of augment to the past participle. In some cases, it only increases the force of the word, without any essential addition of meaning, as in afar. — In some words of Greek origin, a is privative, giving to them a negative sense; as in apathetic: before a vowel it becomes an; as in anonymus, from ὄνομα, name. In a few words of Latin origin, it is another form of the prefix ab (q. v.); as in avert.

Ab, a prefix to words of Latin origin, and a Latin preposition, as in abduct, is the same as the Greek ἀπό, Skr. apa, Goth. af, A.-S. and Eng. of. It denotes from, separation, or departure. Before c and t, it is generally changed into abs, as in abscess, abscond, abstain, abstemious. See A.

Ad. [Cf. W. at, to, toward, Goth., Icel., and Eng. at.] A Latin preposition, signifying to, as in adhere. — In composition, the last letter is usually changed into the first letter of the word to which it is prefixed. Thus for adclamare, the Romans wrote acclamare; for adgredi, aggredi; for adfirmare, affirmare; for adlegere, allegere; for adponere, apponere; for adripere, arripere; for adscribere, ascribere; for adtinere, attinere.

Al. 1. In Arabic, an article or inseparable prefix, answering to the Italian il, and the Sp. el. Its use is to render nouns definite, like the English the; as, Alkoran, the Koran, or the Book, by eminence; alcove, alchemy, alembic, almanac, &c.

2. A form of the Latin prefix ad. See AD.

Amb. [Lat. ambi, amb, am, an (as in ambidens, ambages, amicire, anhelare), Gr. ἀμφί, A.-S. emb, ymb, N. H. Ger. um.] About; around; — a prefix used in composition in words derived from the Latin; as in ambient, ambition, &c.

Am'phī, n. [Gr. ἀμφί. See supra.] A prefix in words of Greek origin, signifying about, around, on both sides, on all sides, &c.; as in amphibious, amphitheater.

Ā'nā. [Gr. ἀνά.] A prefix in words from the Greek, denoting on, upon, upward, up to, throughout, backward, back to, again, previously, or against; as in analogy, analytic, anatomy.

Ant-, } [Gr. ἀντί, against.] A prefix in many words
Ant'ti-, } from the Greek, meaning against, over against, or opposed to; as in antarctic, antidote, antipathy, antithesis.

An'te. A Latin preposition, the Gr. ἀντί, A.-S. & Goth. and (cf. ANSWER); much used in the composition of English words, especially in words from the Latin and Greek languages. It signifies before in place, in front; and figuratively, before in time. Examples are ante-chamber, antecedent, antediluvian.

Ā'po. [Gr. ἀπό. See AB.] A Greek preposition used in composition, and signifying from, away from, off, or asunder; as in apoplexy, apothecary, apologue.

B.

Bē prefix, as in because, before, beset, bedeck, become, is originally the same word as by; A.-S. be and bi or big, Goth. bi. It denotes nearness, closeness, about, on, at, and generally has an intensive force, though it is sometimes apparently insignificant.

Bī. [From Lat. bis, twice, which in composition drops the s.] 1. In most branches of science, bi in composition denotes two, twice, doubly; as, bidentate, two-toothed; biterminate, doubly ternate, &c.

2. (Chem.) Bi in composition denotes that the compound contains two parts or equivalents of the first-mentioned ingredient to one of the other; thus, a bichromate of potash contains two parts of chromic acid to one of potash.

Bis, adv. [Lat. bis, twice, for duis, from duo, two, like bellum from duellum.] Twice. See BI.

C.

Āt'a. [Gr. κατά.] The Latin and English form of a Greek preposition used in composition to signify down, downward, down upon, downright, completely, &c.; as in cataclysm, catacomb, catalogue, cataract. It sometimes drops the final vowel, as in catoptric; and is sometimes changed to cath, as in cathartic, catholic.

Āir'eum. [Accusative of circus, a circle, Gr. κίρκος.] A Latin preposition, used as a prefix in many English words; as in circumscribe, circumspect, circumvent. In circuit, circuitous, &c., the m is dropped.

Ām- or Ān-. [The same as cum, which is akin to Gr. σύν, old Attic ξύν.] A Latin preposition signifying with or against, used in composition as an inseparable prefix. The form com is used before the labials b, p, and m, and con before the other consonants. Before l, however, con or com is changed into col, as in collect, from colligere; before r into cor, as in corrupt, from corrumpere, corruptum; while before a vowel or h, the n or m is dropped, as in co-operate, coalesce, cohabit, &c.

Ān'trā. A Latin preposition, signifying against, in opposition, entering into the composition of some English words; as, contradict, contravene, &c. It is properly the ablative of an adjective, conterus (formed from con, with), which is not in use. In old English, it took the form counter; as in counteract.

Āo. See CON.

Āoun'ter. See CONTRA.

D.

De. A Latin prefix denoting a moving from, separation; as in debark, decline, decease, deduct, decamp. Hence, it often expresses a negative, as in derange. Sometimes it augments the sense, as in deprave, despoil. It coincides nearly in sense with the French des and Latin dis.

Dī. 1. [Gr. δίς, twice.] In chemistry, a prefix denoting two equivalents of the substance indicated by the noun following that of which the prefix forms a part; as, dichloride of mercury; i. e., a compound formed of two equivalents of mercury and one of chlorine.

2. See DIS.

Dī'a. [Gr. διά, akin to Lat. dis.] A prefix denoting through, right through; as in diameter, diagram, dialogue.

Dīs (91). A prefix or inseparable preposition, from the Latin (whence Fr. des), denoting separation, a parting from, as in distribute, disconnect; hence it generally has the force of a privative and negative, as in disarm, disoblige, disagree. It sometimes passes into the forms di and dif; as in divert, differ, diffuse.

Dys-. An inseparable prefix, from the Greek δυσ-, hard, ill, and signifying ill, bad, hard, difficult, unlucky, dangerous, and the like; as in dysentery, dyspepsy.

E.

E. A Latin prefix; the same as EX. See EX.

Ēm. See EN.

Ēn. A prefix to many English words, chiefly borrowed from the French; as in enchant, enamor, encore, &c. It coincides with the Latin in, Gr. ἐν; and some English words are written indifferently with en or in. For ease of pronunciation, it is changed to em, particularly before a labial, as in employ, empower.

Ēp. } [Gr. ἐπί. See OB.] A prefix, signifying on, above, Ēp'ī. } toward, by, to, among, near, &c.; as in epi- logue, epithet, &c.

Ēū. A prefix from the Gr. εὖ, well, used very frequently in composition, signifying well, easy, advantageous, good, and the like; as in eulogy, euphony, &c.

Ēx. A Latin preposition or prefix, Gr. ἐξ or ἐκ, signifying out of, out, proceeding from. Hence, in composition, it signifies sometimes out of, as in exhale, exclude; sometimes off, from, or out, as in excise; sometimes beyond, as in excess, exceed, excel. In some words, it intensifies the meaning; in others, it has little effect on the signification. The x regularly remains only before the vowels and before c, h, p, q, s, t (example, exert, excel, exhaust, expend, exquisite, exsiccant, extort); it is assimilated to a following f (effusion), and drops away altogether before the other consonants (elect, event, edition, &c.) In a few words it changes into ec (eccentric). Prefixed to names of office, it denotes that a person has held that office, but has resigned it, or been left out, or dismissed; as, ex-chancellor, ex-president, and the like.

Ēx'trā. [Contracted from exterā (parte), from exter, being on the outside, from ex, out of, from.] A Latin preposition, denoting beyond or excess, often used in composition as a prefix signifying outside of, or beyond the limits or jurisdiction of that denoted by the word to which it is joined; as in extradition, extravagant.

F.

For. [A.-S. for, fore, Goth. faur, faura, allied to Lat. pro, Gr. πρό, Skr. pra-.] As a prefix to verbs, for has usually the force of a negative or privative, denoting before, that is, against, or away, aside; as in forbid, forsake, for-swear, forego. In a few cases, it is merely intensive, as in forbathe.

Fōre. [A.-S. fore. See FOR.] An adjective much used in composition, to denote advancement in place or time; as in forebode, forefather, foreshorten.

H.

Hȳ'per. [Gr. ὑπέρ, allied to Lat. super, Skr. upare, Ger. über, Eng. over.] A prefix used in composition to denote excess, or something over or beyond; as in hyperbolical, hypertrophy. Sometimes it is used in the composition of chemical terms, instead of super, to denote excess, or that the substance first mentioned in the name of the compound enters in a greater proportion than the other; as, hyper-oxide, one containing an excess of oxygen.

Hȳ'po. A prefix from the Greek preposition ὑπό [allied to Lat. sub, Skr. upar], under, beneath, and frequently used in composition to signify a less quantity, or a low state or degree of that denoted by the word with which it is joined, position under or beneath it, and the like; as in hypochondriac, hypostatic, hypothesis. In chemical language, prefixed to the name of a compound containing oxygen, it designates another compound containing less oxygen; as, hypo-nitrous acid, which contains less oxygen than nitrous acid.

I.

Ī. A prefix, the form of in when used before words beginning with l. See IN.

Īm. A prefix from the Lat. in, n being changed to m, for the sake of easy utterance, before a labial, as in imbibe, immense, impartial. The same prefix is sometimes used in compounds not of Latin origin, as in imbank, imbitter. For im, the French write em, which is used in words introduced into the English from the French language. See EM.

Īn. 1. [Allied to Gr. ἐν, Skr. ina-.] A prefix from the Latin in, often used in composition, and signifying within, into, or among, as in inbred, incense, or serving to render emphatic the sense of the word to which it is prefixed, as in inclose, increase. — In, before l, is changed into il, as in illusion; before r, into ir, as in irregular; before a labial, into im, as in imbitter, immaterial, impatient.

2. [Allied to Eng. un. See UN.] A Latin particle of negation; as in inactive, incapable. Before b and p, it becomes im; before l, m, r, the n assimilates itself to these consonants. In a few words in is changed into ig, as in ignoble, ignorant.

Īn'ter. [From in, with an adverbial ending.] A Latin preposition, signifying among or between; — used as a prefix; as in intercept, interfere, interrupt.

Īn'tro. [Lat., contr. from intero (loco)]. A prefix signifying within, into, in, and the like; as in introduce, intromission.

M.

Mēt'ā. [Gr. μετά, allied to μέσος, Lat. medius, Eng. mid, middle.] A prefix in words of Greek origin, signifying in the midst of; also, beyond, over, after, behind, with, between, reversely; as in metaphor, metaphysics, metamorphose.

Mīs. [A.-S., Icel., and Goth. missa-, having the same origin with the verb to miss.] A prefix denoting error, wrong, defect, unlikeness, and the like; as in mistake, mismanage, mispronounce, mistrust.

N.

Nōn, adv. [Lat. non, O. Lat. nænu, nenu, nænum, nenum, from ne-ænum, or ne-unum, not one.] Not; — used in English as a prefix, generally and properly to substantives and verbs only, giving them a negative sense, ordering and varying their meaning, as do the prefixes un and in those of adjectives; as, non-residence, non-performance; also, in some cases, prefixed to adjectives; as, non-acid, non-electric.

O.

Ob. [Kindred with Gr. ἐπί.] A Latin preposition, signifying, primarily, in front, before, and hence against, toward; as in obicere, to object, i. e., to throw against. In composition, the letter b is often changed into the first letter of the word to which it is prefixed; as in occasion, offer, oppose. It means reversed or back in obvate, occiput, &c., and often on or in.

P.

Pār'ā. [Gr., prob. akin to Lat. præ and præter.] A preposition, used in composition, and signifying beside, to the side of, to, amiss, wrong (like for in forswear, &c.), beyond, contrary to, &c.; as in paradox, paragon, paralysis, parasite. It is sometimes contracted into par; as in parody, paroxysm, &c.

Pēr. A Latin preposition often used in composition as a prefix denoting through, passing, or over the whole extent; as in perambulate, perfunctory, persecute. It is used, in chemistry, with the signification very, fully, or to the utmost extent; as in peroxide, a substance oxidated to the utmost degree.

Pēr'i. [Gr. περί, Skr. pari-.] A prefix used in many words derived from the Greek, and signifying with, around, about, near, and the like; as in pericarp, period, periphrase.

Pōst. A Latin preposition, much used in composition as a prefix, signifying after; as in postpone, postscript.

Prē. An English form of the Latin prefix præ, before, originally dat. f., answering to pro, as dat. m., of per, through. It expresses priority of time, place, or rank; as in preclude, prediet, prefer, preponderate. It sometimes signifies beyond, and may be rendered very, as in prepotent.

Prē'ter. A prefix, from the Lat. præter (from præ, with the adverbial termination ter), used in the composition of some English words, and having the signification of past, beyond; hence, beside, more; as, preterit, pretermit, preternatural.

Prō. [Originally neuter dative for proi, Gr. πρό.] A Latin preposition, used in composition as a prefix, and denoting fore, forth, forward; as in produce, project, profess, promise, protract.

Prōs. [Gr. πρός, Cf. Skr. prati-.] A Greek preposition, used in composition, and signifying motion towards, a being on, at, by, or beside, a remaining beside, and hence connection and engagement with any thing; as in prosclyte, prosody, &c.

Pseū'do (sū'do). [From Gr. ψεῦδής, lying, false, from ψεῦδειν, to belie.] A prefix used in words from the Greek, and signifying false, counterfeit, pretended, or spurious; as, pseudo-martyr, pseudo-philosophy, pseudonym.

R.

Rā. See RE.

Rē. A prefix or inseparable partiele in the composition of words, denoting return, repetition, iteration; as in recur, reduce, refrain. It is abbreviated from red, which the Latins retained in words beginning with a vowel, as in redimere, redire, redintegrare. From the Latin the Italians, Spanish, and French have also the prefix ra, which is found in some English words derived from these languages.

Rē'tro. [Lat., from re and the adverbial termination ter.] A prefix in words from the Latin, signifying back or backward; as in retrocede, retrospect.

S.

Se. [Orig. form of sine.] An inseparable preposition used in some words from the Latin, and signifying without, aside, by itself; as in secure, seduce, seclude, &c.

Sī'ne. A Latin preposition, signifying without, and used in composition; as, sinécure. It drops the final e in sincere, and also changes the n into m in simple.

Stēp. [A.-S. steóp, from steópan, stēpan, O. H. Ger. stiufan, to bereave.] A prefix used in composition before father, mother, brother, sister, son, daughter, child, &c., to indicate that the person thus spoken of is not a blood-relative, but is a relative by the marriage of a parent.

Sūb. [Allied to Gr. ὑπό.] A Latin preposition, denoting under or below, used in English as a prefix, to express an inferior position or intention, and also a subordinate degree, or imperfect state of a quality. Before c, f, g, p, r, and m, the b is changed into those letters, as in succeed, suffer, suggest, suppose, surrogate, and summon.

When prefixed to the name of a chemical compound, sub denotes that this, if an oxysalt, contains a less number of equivalents of the acid than of the base, or that the base is a sub-oxide; or, if it is a haloid salt, or analogous compound, that the electro-negative is in a smaller proportion than the electro-positive constituent, or is combined with it in the smallest proportion possible; as in sub-bromide, sub-iodide, &c.

Sūb'ter. [From sub and the adverbial termination ter.] A Latin preposition, signifying under, used as a prefix in English with the same meaning as sub; but it is less general in its application; as in subterfuge.

Sū'per. A Latin preposition (same as Greek ὑπέρ), used as a prefix, and signifying above, over, or in excess; as in superfine, superintend, supervise.

Sū'prā. [Orig. supera, from super.] A Latin preposition, signifying above, over, or beyond; used in composition; as in supralapsarian.

Sūr. A prefix, from the French, contracted from the Latin super, supra, and signifying over, above, beyond, upon; as in surcharge, surmount, surprise.

Sŷn. A prefix from the Greek preposition σύν (the Lat. cum, akin to Lat. simul, Skr. sa-, sam), with, along with, together with, at the same time; as in synonym, syntax, synthesis. Before b, m, p, ph, it changes into sym (symbol, symmetry, sympathy, symphony); before l into syl (syllogism); and sometimes the n is dropped, as in system.

T.

Trāns. A Latin preposition, used in English as a prefix, signifying over, beyond, through, on the other side; as in transalpine, beyond the Alps. Hence, in a moral sense, it denotes a complete change; as, to transform. It sometimes drops the two last consonants; as in traduce.

Trī. A prefix, signifying three, thrice, from Gr. τρίς, thrice, τρεῖς, τρία, Lat. tres, tria, three; as in triangle, trident, triennial.

U.

Ul'trá. [Lat., orig. fem. of ulter, being beyond, from uls, beyond.] A prefix from the Latin, having in composition the signification beyond, on the other side, chiefly when joined with words expressing relations of place; as, ultra-marine, ultra-montane, &c. In other relations, it has the sense of excessively, exceedingly, beyond what is common, natural, right, or proper; as, ultra-conservative, ultra-despotic, &c.

Ūn. [A.-S. un, and sometimes on, Goth. un, Icel. ð, allied to Gr. ἀν, ἀ, Skr. an, a, Lat. in.] A negative prefix attached at will to almost any English adjective, or participle used adjectively, and to less numerous classes of nouns and verbs. See UN in the Dictionary.

W.

With. [See in Dictionary.] An English preposition, sometimes used in composition, and signifying opposition, privation, separation, or departure; as in withdraw, withstand, withhold.

Eer. See IER.

En. A plural termination of nouns and of verbs formerly in use, as, in housen, escapen; and retained in oxen and children. It is also still used as the termination of some verbs, as in hearken, from the Saxon infinitive. It is also used to form from nouns adjectives expressing the material of which a thing is made; as, leadcn, wooden, golden.

Ence, } [Lat. -entia.] A termination of abstract nouns
En-cy. } from the Latin, or of nouns that follow the analogy of nouns so derived; as, abstinence, circumference, reticence, agency, contingency.

Ent. [Lat. -ens, -entis.] A termination of nouns from the Latin, denoting the doer of a thing; as, dependent, recipient, student; or of participial adjectives; as, fervent, ardent.

Er. A termination of many English words, and the Teutonic form of the Latin or. It denotes an agent, and was originally of the masculine gender, but is now applied to men or things indifferently; as in hater, farmer, heater, grater. At the end of names of places, er signifies a man of the place; thus, Londoner is the same as London man.

Es'cent. [Lat. -escens, -escentis.] A termination of participial adjectives from the Latin, denoting progression, growing, or becoming; as convalescent, putrescent, quiescent.

S.

Shīp. [A.-S. scipe, scype, from scyppan, sceppan, to mold, form, shape.] A termination denoting state, office, dignity, profession, or art; as in lordship, friendship, chancellorship, stewardship, horsemanship.

Sōme. [A.-S. sum, Goth. sama, like, the same.] A termination of certain adjectives. It indicates a considerable degree of the thing or quantity; as, mettlesome, full of mettle or spirit; gladsome, very glad or joyous.

Stēr. [A.-S. estre, istre.] A termination, as in drugster, gamester, songster, spinster, denoting skill or occupation. It was originally applied to denote the female agent in an action. Thus, songster signified, at first, a female who sings; but the ending ster having at length, in a measure, lost its peculiar force, the feminine termination ess was appended to it; thus, songster became songstress with a double ending.

T.

T, } [A.-S.] A termination of abstract nouns of Anglo-
Th. } Saxon origin; as, depth, growth, strength, wealth, drift, gift, theft.

Ty. [Lat. -tas, -tatis, Fr. té.] A termination of words denoting action or an active faculty, being, or a state of being, viewed abstractly; as, antiquity, difficulty, humility, necessity.

U.

Ūre. [Lat. -ura.] A termination of words derived from the Latin (often through the Italian or French), and denoting action or an active faculty, being, or a state of being, viewed abstractly; as, creature, fracture, legislature, nature, superstructure.

W.

Ward, or Wards. [A.-S. -weard, -weardes; Goth. vairths, allied to Lat. vertere, to turn, versus, toward.] A suffix used in the composition of a large class of words, and denoting direction, or tendency to, motion toward, and the like; as, in upward, onwards.

LANGUAGES KINDRED TO THE ENGLISH.

§ 1. Anglo-Saxon, Teutonic, Indo-European. The English language is the descendant and representative of the Anglo-Saxon. It has lost very much of the inflection, and very many of the words, which belonged to the parent language; and, on the other hand, it has borrowed words very largely, to the extent even of half its vocabulary, from other languages, especially the French and the Latin. Yet all the inflections that remain in it, and most of its formative endings, the pronouns and particles, and, in general, the words which are in most frequent and familiar use, have come to it from the Anglo-Saxon. With all its mixture of foreign elements, it is still a Teutonic language, like the German, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, and others. These again make one branch in that great family of languages, which, as it extends from India westward, and covers nearly the entire area of Europe, is called Indo-European. Among all families of kindred tongues, the Indo-European is pre-eminent, both for the perfection of its organic structure, and for the value of its literary monuments. The parent of the whole family, the one primitive Indo-European language, has left no such monument of itself; but its forms and roots may be made out, to a great extent, by the scientific comparison of the languages which are descended from it. The main branches of the Indo-European family are the following:—

§ 2. I. The INDIAN. The Sanskrit of the four Vedas, the sacred books of the Brahman religion, is more ancient than the common or classical Sanskrit. Even the latter had ceased to be the language of common life as early as the third century before Christ. It was succeeded by the Prakrit dialects, one of which, the Pali, is the sacred language of the Buddhists in Ceylon and Further India. These, in their turn, were succeeded by the modern idioms of Northern Hindustan, the Bengali, Marathi, Guzerathi, and others. The Hindustani (or Urdu), formed in the camps and courts of the Mohammedan conquerors of India, is largely intermixed with Persian and Arabic. The widely-scattered Gypsies speak, with great diversity of dialect, a language which is clearly of Indian stock.

§ 3. II. The IRANIAN. To this branch belong, 1. The Zend, which is believed to have been the language of ancient Bactria, and is preserved in the Avesta, or sacred writings of the Parsis. 2. The Old Persian, which is seen in the cuneiform (or arrow-headed) inscriptions of Darius and Xerxes. The modern Persian has lost nearly all the ancient inflection, and with the Mohammedan religion has adopted a multitude of words from the Arabic. Other languages belonging to this branch are those of the Kurds, the Afghans, the Ossetes (in the Caucasus), and the ancient and modern Armenians. The Indian and Iranian are often classed together as forming the Indo-Persian or Aryan branch of our family.

§ 4. III. The GREEK. Of its numerous dialects, the first to receive literary culture was the Old Ionic or Epic, followed by the Æolic, the Doric, the New Ionic, and finally the Attic, which became at length, though with some change of form, the common language of literature and society. It is represented now by the Romæic or Modern Greek. The Albanian, spoken in a large part of modern Greece, is supposed to be a descendant of the ancient Illyrian.

§ 5. IV. The LATIN. This is often joined with the preceding, as the Greco-Latin, or Classical branch. Closely akin to Latin were the other Italian languages—the Oscan, Umbrian, etc.—in Central Italy. The modern descendants of the Latin are called the Romance languages. They are the Italian, the Spanish, the Portuguese, the Provençal (of Southern France, used in the middle ages as a literary language), and the French (originally the popular dialect of Northern France). All these contain a small proportion of Teutonic words, brought in by the barbarian conquerors of the Western Roman Empire. But another Romance language—that of the Wallachians, the descendants of the Romanized Dacians—is largely intermixed with borrowed words, taken chiefly from the neighboring Slavonic tribes.

§ 6. V. The CELTIC. This branch is divided by strongly-marked differences into two sections: 1. The Gaelic, including the Irish (or native language of Ireland), the Erse (or Highland Scotch), and the Manx (the corrupt idiom of the Isle of Man). The last two are little more than dialects of the Irish. 2. The Cymric, including the Welsh (or native language of Wales), the Cornish (which was spoken in Cornwall, but went out of use in the last century), and the Armorican (spoken in the French province of Brittany, the ancient Armorica). The oldest manuscript specimens of the Gaelic belong to the close of the eighth century: for the Cymric, the oldest which are at all copious, are three or four centuries later.

§ 7. VI. The SLAVONIC. The earliest monument is the version of the Bible, made in the ninth century, by the Greek missionaries Cyril and Methodius, into the Old Slavonic, the idiom spoken by the Bulgarians of that time. This widely-diffused class of languages divides itself into two principal sections: 1. The eastern and southern Slavonic, including the Russian, the Bulgarian, and the three Illyrian idioms, Servian, Croatian, and Slovenic. 2. The western Slavonic, including the Polish, the Bohemian (with the Moravian and Slovak dialects), the Lusatian or Wendish, and the extinct Polabian.

§ 8. VII. The LITHUANIAN. The language of Lithuania has no monuments older than the middle of the sixteenth century; but it has preserved in a surprising degree the ancient inflection and structure. To the same stock belong the Lettish of Courland and Livonia, which is much less ancient in its form, and the Old Prussian, which was once spoken on the coast of the Baltic east of the Vistula, but became extinct in the seventeenth century. The connection between this and the preceding branch is such that they are often classed together as the Letto-Slavic languages.

§ 9. VIII. The TEUTONIC. Here again the earliest monument is a version of the Bible, made by Ulphilas, an Arian bishop of the fourth century, into his native Gothic (or Mæso-Gothic), the language spoken at that time by the Goths on the Lower Danube. This work is preserved only in fragments, but these are of considerable extent, and are of inestimable value to the philologist. Among the Teutonic languages we distinguish, —

§ 10. 1. The High Germanic, in upper or Southern Germany. The Old High German is seen in Otfrid's Krist, Notker's Translation of the Psalms, and other monuments, most of them in verse, from the eighth century to the end of the eleventh. The Middle High German, from the twelfth to the fifteenth century, has a rich poetical literature, including the Nibelungen Not with its attendant epics, and the lyric poetry of the Minnesinger. The New High German is the language of Luther's Bible-version and of all German literature since the Reformation.

§ 11. 2. The Low Germanic, in Northern Germany and the Netherlands. Here belong, (a.) The Friesic, which was once spoken along the whole northern coast of Germany, from the Elbe westward. Its early monuments consist almost wholly of laws, beginning with the fourteenth century. For a long time it has existed only as a popular idiom, and is now confined to a few small and scattered localities. (b.) The Anglo-Saxon (sometimes called simply Saxon), which in the fifth and sixth centuries was transplanted from North-eastern Germany to Britain, and has had its subsequent development and history in that island. (c.) The Old Saxon, which was spoken in Northern Germany between the Rhine and the Elbe, south of the narrow sea-coast region, which was occupied by the Friesic. It is known almost solely from the Heliand (i. e., Savior), a metrical narration of the gospel history, preserved in manuscripts of the ninth century. The language of the Netherlands in the same period can not have differed much from the Old Saxon, which may be regarded as the common parent of the two following idioms. (d.) The Dutch, or Low Dutch, spoken in Holland, and used in literature since the last part of the thirteenth century. The Flemish, spoken in Flanders, is a dialect of the Dutch. (e.) The Low German, strictly so called (or Plattdeutsch), the idiom of the common people in Northern Germany. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, it was used as a literary language; but political circumstances, giving ascendancy to the High German, have reduced it to the inferior position of a popular dialect.

§ 12. 3. The Norse, or Scandinavian. The Old Norse is also called Old Icelandic, as most of its abundant literature (Eddas, Sagas, etc.) was composed in Iceland. The oldest manuscripts in which it is preserved are of the thirteenth century; but many of its productions are of earlier origin, going back even to the heathen times of Scandinavia. The modern Icelandic has adhered with remarkable fidelity to the forms of the ancient language. But the modern idioms of the Scandinavian mainland, the Swedish, and, still more, the Danish (of which the Norwegian is only a dialect), have undergone extensive changes.

§ 13. Languages not kindred to the English. The Indo-European family has no isolated domain, but comes in contact with various other families of languages. It is bounded along its whole northern frontier by the Tartaric (or Tataric) family (called also the Turanian, or the Altaic), which includes the numerous and widely-different languages of the Manchoos, the Mongols, the Turks (in Asia and Europe), the Magyars (in Hungary), the Finns, and a multitude of other tribes. To the south-east, it touches on the so-called Dravidian family, the Tamil and its sister idioms in Ceylon and Southern India. In South-western Asia it is in contact with a more remarkable family, — the Semitic, — including the Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic, with their ancient and important literatures. Even in South-western Europe, it is doubtful whether the ancient Etruscan belonged to our family. It is perfectly clear that the ancient Iberian did not belong to it, which was once the prevailing language of the Spanish peninsula, and which still lives, on the two sides of the Pyrenees, in the strange language called Basque (Biscayan, or Euscarran). Whether the Indo-European has a primitive connection with any of the adjacent families, is a question which has not been, and perhaps never will be, decided by philological evidence. At all events, it is certain that between Welsh and Sanskrit, distant as they are in space and time, there is an infinitely closer connection than between the neighboring pairs of Russian and Finnish, German and Hungarian, or Greek and Hebrew. It is true that some languages of our family have borrowed particular words from languages of other families. The English, for example, has taken from the Hebrew such words as shekel, cherub, seraph, jubilee, pharisee, cabala, etc.; and from some of them has formed derivatives, such as seraphic, jubilant, pharisaical, pharisaism, cabalist, cabalistical, etc. But this borrowing can only occur where there are historical conditions that favor it: even then it has its limits and its distinctive marks, and must not be confounded with a radical affinity between two languages. All etymologizing which assumes or implies a radical affinity between English and Hebrew, English and Finnish, or the like, is, in the present state of philology, unscientific and illusory.

* * * In this Dictionary, words from foreign languages, both ancient and modern, are usually printed in Italics, though many of them are not ordinarily so printed in other works; as, Addendum, Alguazil, Alibi.

* * * Compound words, which in ordinary writing and printing have their constituent parts separated by a hyphen, are here distinguished from those which are usually and properly written and printed without one, by the use of a heavier hyphen than that employed for the mere division of words into syllables; as, Able-bodied. Words having prefixes or initial syllables which are commonly separated from the other syllables by a hyphen, are distinguished in the same way; as, Re-enforce, Electro-magnetic.

* * * For the "KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION," see page vi. It is desirable that those who use this Dictionary should make themselves familiar with the Key, as they will then find it easy to understand the notation by which the pronunciation of every word is expressed.

DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

ABB

A. 1. The first letter of the alphabet in most of the known languages of the earth. It is naturally the first letter, because it represents the first vocal sound naturally formed by the organs of speech; namely, that heard in far, mast, &c. See Prin. of Pron., §§ 2-8, 44, 45. 2. An adjective, commonly called the indefinite article, and signifying one or any, but less emphatically. It is placed before nouns of the singular number denoting an individual object, before collective nouns, and also before plural nouns when the adjective few or the phrase great many is interposed. It is a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon an, or ane, one, and is substituted for an, for the sake of euphony, before all words beginning with a consonant sound, except words beginning with the sound of h and having the accent on any other syllable than the first; as, a table, a woman, a year, a unit, a eulogy, a oneness, &c. Formerly, an was used before both vowel and consonant sounds. 3. (Mus.) The nominal of the sixth tone in the model major scale (that in C), or of the first tone of the minor scale, which is named after it the scale in A minor. A sharp (A ♯), the name of a musical tone intermediate between A and B. — A flat (A ♭), the name of a tone intermediate between A and G.

Aa-rōn'ie, } a. Pertaining to Aaron or to his priestly office.
Aa-rōn'ie-al, }
A-back', adv. (Naut.) Backward, against the mast; — said of the sails when pressed by the wind.

Taken aback, taken by surprise; unexpectedly baffled.

Āb'a-eus, n. [Lat.] (Arch.)

1. The upper plate upon the capital of a column, supporting the architrave. 2. An instrument for performing arithmetical calculations by means of sliding balls or counters.

A-bāft' (6), prep. (Naut.) Towards the stern from; back of; farther back than.

Ab-āl'ien-āte (-āl'yen-), v. t. [imp. & p. p. ABALIENATED; p. pr. & vb. n. ABALIENATING.] [Lat. abalienare; ab and alienus, foreign. See ALIENATE.] (Law.) To transfer the title of from one to another.

Ab-āl'ien-ā'tion, n. (Law.) Act of abalienating.

A-bān'don, v. t. [imp. & p. p. ABANDONED; p. pr. & vb. n. ABANDONING.] [Fr. abandonner, fr. Lat. ad, and Low Lat. bandum, proclamation, interdiction.] To give up wholly and finally, or with a view never to resume.

Syn. — To relinquish; forsake; desert; surrender; leave; forego. — We leave what we may again resume, as an employment; we abandon what we give up finally, as vice; we relinquish what we have prized or sought, as a claim or hopes; we desert what we ought to adhere to, as duty; we surrender (usually under a necessity) what we have held as our own or in trust, as a fortress; we renounce a thing publicly or as a duty, as allegiance or the world; we forego an enjoyment; we forsake what we have frequented, as society.

A-bān'doned, p. a. Given up entirely, as to a vice.

Syn. — Forsaken; deserted; profligate; depraved; corrupt; reprobate. — A reprobate is one so utterly abandoned as to leave no hope of his recovery; a profligate is one who is openly and shamelessly wicked; a man may be corrupt or de- praved in heart without showing it in his outward life, and hence he may not be forsaken or deserted by the virtuous.

A-bān'don-ee', n. (Law.) One to whom a thing is abandoned.

A-bān'don-er, n. One who abandons.

A-bān'don-ment, n. Act of abandoning, or state of being abandoned; entire desertion or relinquishment.

A-bāse', v. t. [imp. & p. p. ABASED (a-bāst'); p. pr. & vb. n. ABASING.] [Fr. abaissier, from Lat. basis, base.] To bring low, as to the ground; to cast down.

Syn. — To depress; degrade; reduce; humiliate; humble.

A-bāse'ment, n. Act of abasing, or bringing very low.

Syn. — Humiliation; depression; degradation. — Abasement is a humbling, as of the proud; debasement is a corrupting, as of coin; depression is a sinking down, as of spirits; degradation is a bringing down from a higher rank or grade, as of a peer.

Syn. — To confuse; confound. — We are confused when we lose our self-possession; we are confounded when our faculties are overwhelmed and brought to a stand.

A-bāsh'ment, n. Confusion from shame, fear, or the

A-bāt'a-ble, a. Capable of being abated. [like.]

A-bāte', v. t. [imp. & p. p. ABATED; p. pr. & vb. n. ABATING.] [Fr. abattre, from Lat. ab and batuere, to strike.] Literally, to beat or batter down; hence, to bring down or reduce from a higher to a lower state, number, degree, or the like; to diminish; to lessen; specifically (Law), (a.) to cause to fail, as a writ; (b.) to destroy, as a nuisance; (c.) to enter into a freehold after the death of the last possessor, and before the heir or devisee takes possession.

A-bāte', v. i. 1. To decrease; to become less in strength or violence. 2. To be defeated; to fail, as a writ.

Syn. — To decline; subside; diminish. — Lessen, decrease, diminish, refer to quantity or size; decline is to fall off; abate supposes previous violence, as the storm abates; subside previous commotion, as the tumult subsides.

A-bāte'ment, n. Act of abating, or state of being abated; decrease; specifically, (a.) a remitting, as of a tax; (b.) failure, as of a writ; (c.) removal, as of a nuisance; (d.) entry of a stranger into a freehold after the death of the last possessor, before the heir or devisee.

Syn. — Lessening; decline; deduction; reduction; mitigation; diminution; discount.

Āb'a-tīs, } n. [Fr. See ABATE.] (Fort.) A row of Āb'at-tīs, } sharpened branches of trees turned outward for defense.

A-bāt'or, n. One who, without right, enters into a freehold on the death of the last possessor, before the heir or devisee; one who prostrates or removes a nuisance.
